New York City Schools Weather Fiscal Crisis

But a Study Notes that Impact Was Felt By Entire System in the Academic Year

By LEONARD BUDER

The New York City school system is limping to the end of an academic year of great trauma, battered by the city's financial crisis but showing a resiliency and a strength on the part of the staff that has enabled it to make the best of a bad situation.

In its fight for a larger share of the city budget, the school system has moved into a new adversary role with the city administration. And within the system, the year's strains have created new frictions between the central school leadership and many of the city's 32 decentralized school districts.

There are also growing concerns over the fate of decentralization at a time when more and more local initiatives are being circumscribed by central mandates and regulations.

Despite all the problems and grumbling, the current school year, which started last September with a five-day strike by teachers and will end next greater budget cuts next fall, has seen a remarkable pulling together of supervisors, teachers, aides, parents and citizens.

This joining together, according to many people within and outside the system, has made it possible not only for the schools to survive the crisis but, in some instances, to reduce losses and even score successes of sorts.

"A Bright Side"

"We saw a lot more professionalism from teachers and supervisors this year than we ever saw before," said Marjorie Mathews, the chairman of the board of Community School District 16 in Brooklyn's Bedford-Stuyvesant section. "Everyone hung in there. They kept things going."

"If there was a bright side to this terrible crisis, it was the way the school staff came through under the most difficult circumstances," added Frank C. Arricale 2d, the system's personnel chief.

Even so, there are few people close to the scene who do not expect a year of

BEIRUT, Lebanon, June 20—The United States Navy carried out an unhurried evacuation today of 263 Americans and other foreign nationals from Beirut, guarded by Palestinian guerrillas and Lebanese leftist irregulars.

While no up-to-the-minute count of Americans in Lebanon was available, it appeared that fewer than one-tenth of the United States citizens here were making the trip, a 40-hour journey, from Beirut to Athens.

A considerable number of Americans—a United States Embassy count last week estimated the total number here at 1,800—chose not to board a landing craft that took the evacuees to the Spiegel Grove, a vessel officially classed as a landing-ship dock, which lay three miles off the coast.

Some Decide to Stay

Some said they would prefer to make their way to Damascus, Syria, by road, despite cancellation of an American-sponsored bus convoy after reports of a "fire fight" on the highway between the Lebanese and Syrian capitals. Still other Americans have chosen to remain here.

[An Arab League peace-keeping force for Lebanon, delayed for almost two weeks, was said by a league official to be taking shape. The official said he expected the first troops to enter Lebanon this week. Page 15.]

Buses that had been readied for a convoy organized by British authorities took the evacuees from the Riviera Hotel on the seafloor here to the Bain Militaire, a swimming club, where Landing Craft 1654 awaited them.

Pressures Forcing Congress to Start Reforming Itself

By RICHARD L. MADDEN

WASHINGTON, June 20—Congress, which has no qualms about investigating or criticizing persons or institutions, is undergoing a searing examination of an institution it has not paid much attention to for nearly a decade—itsself.

Not since 1967 has Congress, particularly the House, become so preoccupied with the activities of its own members. In that year, the House of Representatives expelled Representative Adam Clayton Powell Jr., the Democratic, for, among other things, keeping his wife on his committee payroll while she lived in Puerto Rico and the Senate censured Senator Thomas J. Dodd, Democrat of Connecticut, for seeking political funds and double-billing for public and private travel.

Almost daily in the House, members are calling news conferences to propose various reforms.

White House Is Stressing New U.S. Aims in Africa

By LESLIE H. GELB

WASHINGTON, June 20—New directions have been set in Administration policy toward Africa—a firm commitment to achieving black majority rule in southern Africa and deeper involvement in maintaining the military balance of power in central Africa.

Administration officials acknowledged in interviews, however, that the direction was easier set than done, given Republican Party politics, conflicting pressures in Congress and the volatile situation in Africa.

President Ford, the officials said, is keeping a low profile in pursuing elements of his new policy in Congress, where results are uncertain and politically costly. He and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger are emphasizing diplomatic activity to impress on African leaders that the decade of American indifference and the previous policy of neglect are over.

The Administration is quietly preparing to allow the Soviet-backed Angolan Government into the United Nations. The State Department is now bargaining with United Nations officials to defer a vote once again, until after the Republican Party convention in August with the understanding that when one is taken, the United States will not exercise its veto.

Mr. Kissinger flew to Europe today for a week of meetings that will include talks with Prime Minister John Vorster of South Africa in West Germany on Wednesday and Thursday. The two will discuss parallel efforts to push the white Rhodesian regime toward a settlement that will give control of the country to the black majority—while allowing for minority rights. Officials predicted that the guerrilla war in Rhodesia would reach a bloody crescendo in late fall with diminishing hope then of a peaceful settlement.

Whether cooperation with South Africa will be sustainable in view of the rioting and bloodshed there is a question that some officials are now asking themselves.

Regular behind-the-scenes contacts are going on with what are called "the four presidents" of Africa.

SOUTH AFRICANS PRAY FOR PEACE

By JOHN F. BURNS

JOHANNESBURG, June 20—South Africans of all races crowded their churches today to pray for racial peace as their Government offered the first hint that it might reassess its policies toward the country's 18 million blacks.

The churches' pews were filled, despite bitterly cold weather that has impeded reconstruction in 11 townships around Johannesburg that were wracked by rioting last week. The police have tentatively estimated that 109 people were killed and 1,100 injured in three days of violence.

The mood of the country seemed to be caught in an Anglican minister's prayer on the state radio that the Government respond to the rioting in a way to promote reconciliation between the races.

Democratic Panel Refuses Equality Pledge to Women

By WARREN WEAVER Jr.

WASHINGTON, June 20—The Democratic Rules Committee refused today to guarantee women an equal share of the seats at the party's national conventions starting in 1980, a move that may be the only controversy to reach the floor of next month's convention in New York City.

The committee, which is expected to meet for a second time on Tuesday, is expected to vote on a plan that would require an equal division of seats between male and female delegates, a position some feminists had been willing to settle for.

The committee's proposal changes the way delegates are chosen in the coming year. It is expected to vote on a plan that would require an equal division of seats between male and female delegates, a position some feminists had been willing to settle for.

Since the ballot is secret, establishing this participation level, it would require an unofficial survey whose results, subject to certain margin of error, may not be acceptable to all.

These figures would become

OFF ST. DAVID'S HEAD, Bermuda, June 20—The giggliest bunch of landlubbers who ever set out to sea—42 British young women with little or no sailing experience—headed, they hoped, for the United States today in the tall ships flotilla.

They had had only three hours of practice offshore today with the sails unfurled.

They are, equally improbably, aboard Britain's largest sailing ship and one of the biggest vessels in Operation Sail, the Sir Winston Churchill, a three-masted topsail schooner, 135 feet long, with a black hull for luck. The top of the mainmast is 112 feet above the water line.

The British women are competing on the final leg, to Newport, on the Tall Ships Trans-Atlantic Race to the United States against 2,500 men and a handful of other women, keen sailors all, on about 100 sailing ships of many nations.

Thankfully, there are 15 other, more experienced, hands aboard the Sir Winston Churchill with the greenhorns. The young trainees, who

'Village' Residents and Police Differ on Youth Gangs

By JOSEPH B. TREASTER

They are boys and girls of 12, 13, 14 or 15. They spend their afternoons and evenings loitering in the little parks in Greenwich Village, smoking marijuana, drinking beer, playing cards and chess and sometimes glaring at passers-by and cursing them.

Occasionally, they become more rowdy, shooting off firecrackers and overturning garbage cans. Not infrequently, they have been accused of chasing and beating up younger children and homosexuals.

For months they have been an annoyance to most residents of the quiet, pleasant streets of the Village. But that attitude among many people turned to terror when a 41-year-old man was stabbed to death recently and 10 youths were seen running away.

For those who felt this terror, it hardly mattered that one police quickly arrested a 14-year-old boy and said the slaying had not been a gang attack.

Spreading fears have prompted community meetings that focus on security, demands for more police protection and even some talk that represents a siege mentality in the face of a growing gang menace.

But the youngsters who hang out in the Village parks say they are being falsely portrayed as vicious gangs, like those that roam decaying sections of Brooklyn and the Bronx with knives, guns and chains.

The Village youths gather in loosely knit, often leaderless groups that, they contend, hardly qualify for the name "gangs." Many of the youngsters come from middle-class families and talk less of street machismo than of going to college someday.

2,800-Year-Old Fortress Is Discovered in Sinai

By TERENCE SMITH
Special to The New York Times

KUNTILLET AJRUD, Israeli-Occupied Sinai — On this lonely, isolated hill overlooking a vast and empty desert plain, an Israeli archaeological team has discovered an ancient Judean fortress containing a rare collection of Hebrew and Phoenician inscriptions dating to about 800 B.C.

The inscriptions were discovered on pottery and the plaster walls of a remarkable 2,800-year-old fortress apparently built by King Jehoshaphat of Judaea to protect the Solomonian route to the port of Elath, and the rich Red Sea trade lanes to the biblical Ophir.

The inscriptions are con-shly going to Elath, then known as Etzion Geber. In the Book of Kings, the Bible records that Solomon made a pact with the Phoenician King Hiram of Tyre to provide Lebanon cedars to build Solomon's Red Sea fleet.

The Phoenician inscriptions found here tend to support the speculation that the ships were actually assembled in what is now Lebanon, were sailed down the Mediterranean to a point near Gaza, broken down there into sections and then hauled across the desert by the shortest route to Elath, which passes Kuntilet Ajrud.

"The theory makes sense," Mr. Meshel said at the site. "We can't prove it by what we have found here, but there was no wood in Elath to build the ships, and it is a fact that later in history the Crusaders hauled ships in sections across the desert in order to surprise their enemies in the Gulf of Elath."

The inscriptions at the site are unusually poetic and religious, leading Mr. Meshel to conclude that the fortress had some sacred tradition associated with it. He stays short of calling it a temple because of its design, but the rich ornamentation, the extensive plastering over the stone-and-mud walls, altars and benches suggest something that there was something special about the place.

"It could have been built to commemorate the religious tradition associated with the Sinai," Mr. Meshel said during a break in the digging. "Even in those days, the Jews knew the biblical stories of the wanderings of the children of Israel in the desert, the accounts of Moses receiving the Commandments on Mount Sinai. Those things had happened 400 or 500 years earlier. Perhaps the Judean kings wanted to commemorate that tradition."

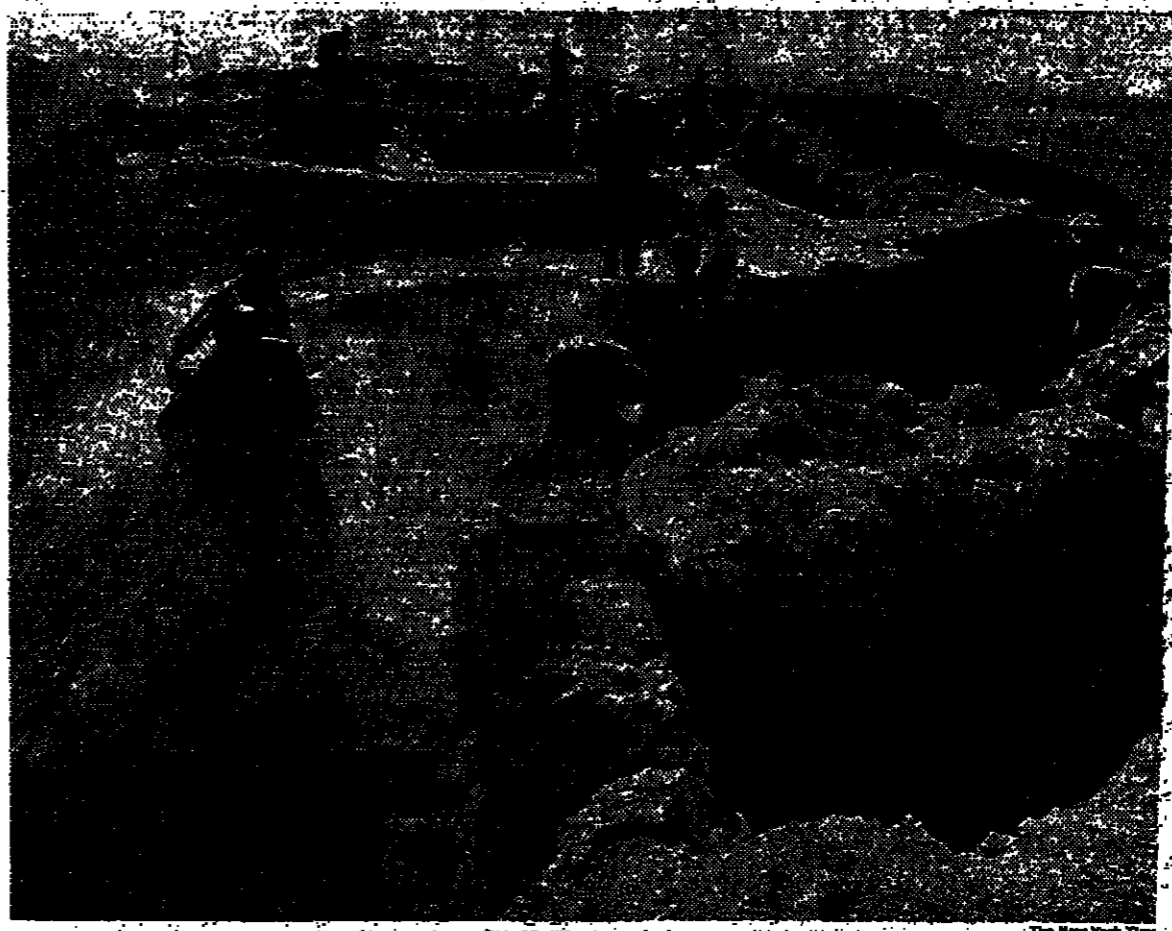

Quality of Ancient Life
One inscription, carved on the rim of a stone bowl, has a more topical reference. It reads, in ancient Hebrew: "May Obadya, son of Adnah, be blessed by God." Mr. Meshel believes this may refer to the Obadya—or Obadiah—mentioned in Chronicles as the commander of King Jehoshaphat's army at the time.

In addition to the inscriptions, the archaeologists discovered beautiful drawings. One shows a cow nursing a calf, another depicts a young girl seated on a bench with her legs crossed, playing a harp, still another portrays the Egyptian god Bes, a popular figure of fertility and protection.

The site is on top of an isolated hill halfway between Gaza and Elath. It rises only about 120 feet above the surrounding plain but affords an unbroken view for at least 20 miles in every direction.

At the foot of the hill a green clump of desert scrub surrounds the 10 wells of Ajrud. The wells, which still work and are used by the Bedouins today, date to antiquity, Mr. Meshel assumes that it was these wells, which provide the only water for miles around, that originally drew travelers to the site 2,800 years ago.

Shards Point to Judaea
The site itself was discovered in 1969 by Edward Palmer, a Briton who explored Sinai and recorded his find-considered doubly significant because several refer to "Jehovah," the traditional name of God that the ancient Jews wrote rarely because it was so extremely sacred. It is the largest collection of eighth century B.C. inscriptions ever found at a single site.

The site itself had been discovered in the 19th century by a Briton who drew tenuous conclusions from what he found.

Clues From Inscriptions
Some of the inscriptions are still being deciphered at Tel Aviv University and the Israel Museum in Jerusalem. But Zeev Meshel, the archaeologist who headed the dig, has reached some tentative conclusions. The more provocative include the following:

"The fortress is the southernmost and westernmost Judean site ever discovered. It stands at a crossroads between the ancient Gaza-Elath route and a track leading to the southern Sinai region. To Mr. Meshel, this suggests that effective control of the Judean kingdom of the period extended much farther south and west than had previously been believed.

Mr. Meshel believes that the Judean kings probably passed this way as they headed for Elath, which, according to the Bible, King Solomon developed as a major port for the Red Sea trade. The existence of this fortress raises the possibility that others like it may lie undiscovered on the Gaza-Elath route.

"The Phoenician inscriptions on the walls are evidence that some Phoenicians passed this way, again prob-ings in a book, "The Desert of the Exodus." Professor Palmer came across the architectural remains at Ajrud and concluded—erroneously—that he had found Gypsuria, a site on the old Roman road between Elath and Gaza.

Using Palmer's work as a guide, Mr. Meshel, a professor in Tel Aviv University's Institute of Natural Science Research, visited the hill in 1970. The first pottery shards he picked up, he said, demonstrated that it was a Judean, not a Roman, site.

Three seasons of subsequent excavation have proved that the site was occupied for only one period, roughly about 800 B.C., and then "graduated" for an unknown reason. There is no sign of destruction other than the ashes of a fire that occurred years later.

Because of its remoteness and the dry desert climate, some organic material survived the centuries intact. The excavators found a perfectly preserved, siliceous cloth flour sieve, as well as pieces of wood, rope and bits of clothing, all dating to the eighth century B.C.

Although they are less important archeologically, these finds excited some of the 50 kibbutznik volunteers to the dig more than anything else. "Holding that cloth in your hands," a young woman said, "you can feel your ancestors."

2 Killed in Korean Clash
SEOUL, South Korea, June 20 (AP)—A South Korean soldier and a North Korean infiltrator were killed in a gun battle last night just south of the demilitarized zone, military authorities announced here today. They said the clash started after the North Korean was spotted in a mountain hideout and refused repeated calls to surrender.

Italians Begin Voting For New Parliament

By ALVIN SIEGEL
Special to The New York Times

ROME, June 20—Millions of Italians voted today in a crucial election that could give the Communist Party a share of power in this Atlantic-alliance nation.

From Sicily to the Alps and under sunny skies, voters walked into polling stations in the most important election here since 1948, when the Christian Democrats began their domination of Italian politics.

At stake in the voting, which will continue tomorrow, are 630 seats in the Chamber of Deputies, 315 seats in the Senate, local councils in 120 cities, including Rome and Genoa, and regional power in Sicily.

More than 40 million people, those 18 years old and over, are eligible to vote for the Chamber of Deputies. Some 35 million, those 25 and over, are eligible for the Senate vote. The prospect is for a Chamber of Deputies more to the left than the Senate.

The results, which will be announced tomorrow, will be watched with intense interest by officials in Western Europe and the United States. President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger have warned against the dangers of a Communist role in the cabinet here and have said that, in such an event, Washington would reassess relations with Italy in view of possible damage to the North Atlantic Alliance.

Whatever the outcome of the two days of voting, it could take weeks before the shape of a new government becomes clear. With 11 parties in the field and neither the Communists nor the Christian Democrats likely to capture a majority, a long period of political bargaining is expected to follow.

The Italian voters are choosing a Parliament, not a government. It will then be up to President Giovanni Leone to name a prime minister acceptable to Parliament and ask him to try to form a cabinet.

Close Race Expected
The predictions of most experts is that the race between the two largest parties, the Communists and the Christian Democrats, will be close.

If the Communists overtake the Christian Democrats and become the largest party, a role for the cabinet would appear to be assured. Their official program in the election campaign has been to stress the need for a government of national unity, including all parties except the neo-Fascists.

The hope of the beleaguered Christian Democrats is to retain a lead, however slight, over the Communists. In regional and local voting last week, the Communists came within 2 percentage points of the Christian Democrats.

With even a slight margin of victory, the Christian Democrats would try to form a new coalition with other parties in hope of keeping the Communists outside the cabinet. The key will be the Socialist Party, whose bloc of votes will be vital in determining the shape of the next administration.

Socialist Intentions
The intention of the Socialists, who are often unpredictable, are unclear. They brought down the last government, a one-party, minority cabinet of Christian Democrats, and forced the elections.

The Communists appear certain to increase their seats in both the Chamber of Deputies and the Senate. In the last national elections in 1972, the Communists won 28.4 percent of the vote and 179 seats in the Chamber. Judging from the local voting last year, they should capture 31 to 34 percent of the votes this time and many more chamber seats.

Among the uncertainties is whether the Communists, the Socialists and the extreme leftist parties could capture more than 50 percent of the vote in the local elections last June they came close, winning more than 47 percent.

The Pope's Advice
That would raise demands within the ranks of both parties to form a popular front government of the left. But Enrico Berlinguer, the Communist Party leader, has said that he would oppose such a coalition because it would be impossible to govern with a narrow margin over the non-Communist forces in Italy.

Pope Paul VI, who has backed Italian bishops in their opposition to the Communist Party, avoided any direct mention of the elections in his regular Sunday appearance to visitors in St. Peter's Square. Instead, he offered a prayer for those who "correctly aspire to interpret the people's right, their needs and their just interests." At the basilica of St. Paul's Outside the Walls, mimeographed handbills were distributed on pews calling on "every Christian to give his vote to those who offer a sure guarantee of respecting the rights of the church."

Enrico Berlinguer, Communist Party leader, leaving the electoral booth to deposit his ballot in ballot box.

U.S. Military Units Quietly Shut Last 2 Major Bases in Thailand

BANGKOK, Thailand, June 20 (AP)—The United States military quietly closed its last two major installations in Thailand today.

A spokesman said that there had been "no turnover ceremony as such" as Americans left U Tapao Air Base on the Gulf of Thailand, which served as a staging center for United States B-52 bombing runs into Cambodia and Vietnam at the height of the Indochina war.

The military also shut down the Ramasun electronic monitoring facility in northeast Thailand, the spokesman said. Under an agreement with the Thai Government March 20, all United States military personnel must be withdrawn from this country by July 20 except for 270 military advisers.

Students Backed Accord
That student groups have demonstrated for strict enforcement of the pact by the Government of Prime Minister Sani Pramo, which took office after the agreement was reached and is more friendly to the United States than the previous one.

The number of United States military personnel in Thailand was down to about 700 today from a peak of 50,000 during the Indochina war. American were stationed at seven air bases and numerous other installations, with as many as 9,000 at U Tapao.

U Tapao's 11,500-foot runway was opened in 1966, putting B-52's just 45 air minutes from targets in Indochina. The nearest alternate heavy bomber base was on Guam, six hours from the war area.

The Ramasun station was a center for monitoring radio communications of Communist forces in China and Southeast Asia. After the Indochina war ended last year, Ramasun's operations mainly supplied Thailand with intelligence information.

Access to Facility Restricted
But the Americans kept Ramasun off-limits to all but a few authorized Thais. The Thai Government said that anything less than full access violated Thai sovereignty. The new Government reviewed the matter, but the two sides were unable to reach a compromise.

The Thai Foreign Minister, Bhisai Rattakul, said yesterday that the United States would give Thailand monitoring equipment that was "of use to Thailand." The Thai military, reportedly unhappy with the civilian Government's decision to make the American forces leave, had lobbied for retention of some equipment to be used by Thai technicians.

Many in Key City Agonize Over Vote

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

SCATINA, Italy, June 20—It was hot and sticky and it was in Latina today. Two men sat under a cafe awning and lingered over a cup of coffee before going home to cook lunch for their families.

Across the street, people steadily into a white school building to vote Italy's national election. The tranquility back to the "of Italy" mused one of the men, a dandy dresser. "I'm going to have a vote in a few hours, and I'm still perplexed."

"We've had one government for 30 years," she went on. "If we vote for them again and give them another chance, will they change themselves?"

"I used to have sympathy for the Socialists, but they faced the government and tout their seriousness," said a second woman, Maria Bernardi, wife of a factory beholder. "One thing we don't do is Communism, but we don't try it. It may well be that the Communists could be a better."

The two women—middle-class housewives with five-teen-age children between them—expressed the mood of Latina today. This is a troubled city. People want an end to confusion and a revival of security, but many of them do not know how to get it.

Should they keep the Christian Democrats, familiar but discredited? Should they switch to the Communists, promising but threatening? Or should they try a third possibility, moderate but irrelevant?

Disgusted and Apprehensive
How these questions are answered in this provincial town of 100,000 people, 45 miles south of Rome, has special interest. In local elections last year, Latina closely followed the national voting pattern that increased the Communist vote and decreased Christian Democratic strength. The governing party led the Communists by only 2 percentage points nationally and by 4 here.

If Latina is any indication, this election will be very close. Some people here are voting Communist for the first time out of desperation. Others are returning to the Christian Democrats to give the party one more chance. Most of them seem disgusted with the past and apprehensive about the future.

Two brothers who work together in the real estate business said that their entire family was switching to the Communists today. Like the two housewives, they want "a calm life with no crime."

One brother mentioned the "robbery and scandals" that have plagued the Government and the recent slaying of Francesco Covo, the public prosecutor in Genoa. "It's frightening when people are just doing their job and get killed that way," he explained.

Prices Rise 25 Pct.
Another problem disturbing Latina is economics. "I'm worried about my children," the other brother said. "If this Government continues, there will be a lot of unemployment when they're old enough to work." The owner of a shoe store said that his prices had jumped 25 percent in three months. "People have to spend money on the important things, like food," said the man, who is voting Socialist. "It has to be an absolute necessity before they buy a pair of shoes, and some weeks I don't have the money to pay my help."

Giuseppe Sarsano, a railroad worker, is switching from the neo-Fascist party to the Christian Democrats. "They need my vote," he said. "They've made a lot of mistakes, and they need help to rectify those mistakes."

"I'm more afraid of losing my liberty than anything else," Mr. Sarsano continued. "Berlinguer says he's for liberty, but if the Communists came to power, he would say, forget it, we don't need you anymore." Enrico Berlinguer is the Communist party leader.

It was lunch time, and the two women in the cafe parted company and hurried home. By midday tomorrow they will have to enter that white stone schoolhouse and make their choice. What they and millions of other uncommitted and uneasy Italians decide will chart the future course of this country.

Rhodesians to Remove The Queen From Coins

SALISBURY, Rhodesia June 20 (Agence France-Press)—New coins to be minted shortly by the Rhodesian Reserve Bank will no longer bear the image of the British sovereign.

The Rhodesian coat of arms — a miner's pickaxe on an escutcheon crowned by the bird of Zimbabwe and flanked by two rising sable antelopes — will replace the head of Queen Elizabeth.

The new issue will be in denominations of 10, 20 and 25 cents, based on the Rhodesian dollar.

India Achieves the Impossible: It Has Food to Spare

Special to The New York Times
NEW DELHI, June 20—With an estimated output of 116 million tons of grain this year, India has achieved what had been considered impossible.

For the first time, according to an official claim, the country has enough food and to spare. Following a good monsoon and two bumper crops, grain is flowing into Government storehouses incessantly. Already over 19 million tons of wheat and rice have been bought by the Food Corporation of India, a Government agency that offers a "supporting price" above the prevailing market rate.

A tour of wheat surplus areas through three states around Delhi revealed only the problems of plenty. The biggest storage place at Hapur, 60 miles west of Delhi, equipped with mechanized silos, is filled to capacity.

Grain Stored in Temple
 At Rampur, a former princely state, 100 miles farther west, palaces have been converted into grain stores. Ballrooms and dining halls with ornate French windows boarded up are filled with grain bags that touch the chandeliers at ceiling level.

In Deobund, 100 miles northwest of Delhi, a temple serves the purpose. In Punjab and Haryana, several school buildings and private warehouses have been taken over. Yet large quantities of wheat and rice are stored in the open in stacks of gunny sacks covered by polyethylene sheets.

Farmers from interior villages are still coming with cartloads of wheat and rice to unload their surplus before the monsoon sets in later this month. Villagers in India do not have adequate storing facilities against rains and floods.

"By July we would have on our hands more than 16 million tons of grain," said R. N. Chopra, chairman of the Food Corporation. "We are now in a position to retain a buffer stock of at least 12 million tons, enough to last two scarcity years."

It was obvious that the Government did not expect so much food to be brought in by the farmers. Until last year it was considered a great achievement if Government agencies were able to procure 10 million tons of grain. Often it needed much persuasion and even compulsion to insure against possible scarcity the Government's year ago even arranged for the import of 5 million tons, most from the United States, most of which has already been bought.

Food prospects brightened when the winter harvest brought in, according to official tallies, 76 million tons of rice and other grains. The summer crop, which has been harvested in the last two months, is expected to exceed 40 million tons. Food Minister Jagjivan Ram recently said the total output might even touch 120 million tons. The previous record was 108 million tons, achieved in 1971.

The agricultural year ends in June and the current official estimate is said to be based on firm statistics received from all over the country. Some of the chronic deficit areas, such as eastern Uttar Pradesh, have reported a surplus this year, said an official.

This has led to more than usual marketable surpluses, resulting in a price decline. However, the Government has been able to ward off disastrous consequences to the agricultural economy by offering a minimum support price of $120 a ton, which is about 25 percent above the open market price.

"But for the Government buying, we would have been forced to sell below cost," said Manje Ram, a farmer in Uttar Pradesh, who drives up three of his buffalo carts stacked with wheat to the Government purchasing center at Deobund.

Mr. Ram said, apart from the monsoon, use of fertilizer and hybrid seed has resulted in the bumper harvest. He said he hoped this would be repeated in the coming year, too, because of prospects of another good monsoon.

Harj Singh, another farmer, said he was disappointed at the lower prices. Last year he was able to sell his wheat for $200 a ton. He conceded that the Government prices this year were better than what private traders would offer, but he said that in selling to Government agencies he had to run from one place to another.

In Punjab, both the Food Corporation and local Government are buying from the farmers. Other officials at the lower level reject the grain on the ground of inferior quality.

"Then someone comes and says he will square it up for consideration," Mr. Singh said. "It doesn't like to deal with these people. There is so much corruption."

ISRAEL CUTS FOR DEFENSE

JERUSALEM, June 20—The Israeli Government's defense budget cut today, overruled by Defense Minister Shimon Peres, who said the reduction would hurt Israel's security.

Military censorship reports reduction would hurt Israel's defense.

Trimming of budget to $4.26 billion of an effort to cut money to pay for cabinet's statement.

Mr. Peres voted new defense and Finance Minister Rabinowitz, who cut 33 percent.

Mr. Rabinowitz prevented a further cut in the 1976-77 budget of $11 billion. Expenditure, welfare and overall budget earlier this year.

YUGOSLAVS PRESS FOR CURB ON FOES

Strive to Win Cooperation of Police Abroad After New Acts of Violence

By MALCOLM W. BROWNE
Special to The New York Times

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, June 18—A bomb explosion at the Yugoslav Embassy in Washington last week has prompted a new diplomatic drive by Yugoslavia to engage the cooperation of foreign police forces against opponents of the Belgrade Government.

Already, Belgrade's initiatives have borne fruit in West Germany, where close to a million Yugoslavs live as migrant workers. The West German Government has informed Yugoslavia that it has formally banned two Yugoslav organizations linked with terrorist activity in West Germany, and has seized quantities of arms from members in a series of nationwide raids.

But discussions between the United States and Yugoslavia on the subject have been even more acrimonious and tense than ever.

Yugoslavia has charged in several notes that United States authorities, including the Federal Bureau of Investigation and local police forces, tacitly encourage terrorism against Yugoslav diplomats.

An Ominous Shadow
Tanyug, the official Yugoslav press agency, asserted that none of the perpetrators of various incidents involving Yugoslav diplomats in the United States had ever been caught or punished. Tanyug added that "the United States authorities are taking no measures to suppress this criminal activity" and that an "ominous shadow" had been cast over Yugoslav-American relations.

A high Yugoslav Foreign Ministry official was even more emphatic in a conversation.

"This situation is absolutely intolerable," he said. "It is not only your Government that encourages these things, it is your police and even your embassy here in Belgrade."

The American position is that while terrorism in any form is a crime in the United States, the mere existence of political organizations hostile to one or another foreign government is not.

In any case, the use of the American police against political dissidents from other countries would face overwhelming constitutional and legal obstacles.

This American argument, however, has infuriated key officials in the Yugoslav Government, reportedly at the very top. Among those who have expressed special annoyance on the subject was Franjo Herjavec, Yugoslav Interior Secretary, who is the chief of police, intelligence and other security services.

The main targets of Belgrade's campaign abroad have been members of the Croatian Ustashi movement, a group that favors separation of Croatia from Yugoslavia. The Ustashi are regarded as the ideological successors of Croatian Fascist collaborators with the Nazi occupation of Yugoslavia, who supplied troops to fight against the Allies.

A History of Assassinations
Assassination as a political tool has a long and important history in Yugoslavia and the former nations of which it is made up. The best-known local assassin, Gavrilo Princip, provided the pretext for World War I by killing the Austrian Crown Prince.

The worst incidents in recent years have been the assassination of the Yugoslav Ambassador to Sweden in 1971, and the assassination last March 7 of the Yugoslav consul general in Frankfurt.

This month, the Uruguayan Ambassador to Paraguay, Carlos Abdala, was slain by a Yugoslav named Jozo Damjanovic, who was reported by the Paraguayan police as having said he had thought he was shooting at the Yugoslav Ambassador. Belgrade regards the case with "utmost severity."

There have been hundreds of other incidents, especially in West Germany, Australia, Canada, South America and the United States, mainly the nuisance bombing of Yugoslav diplomatic missions or enterprises.

A major difficulty governments face in dealing with Yugoslav opponents of the Government of Marshal Tito is in distinguishing between terrorist groups and others peacefully demanding the restoration of civil rights in authoritarian Yugoslavia.

In one of the harshest comments ever publicly made in this country on Yugoslav-American relations, the Belgrade paper Borba said:

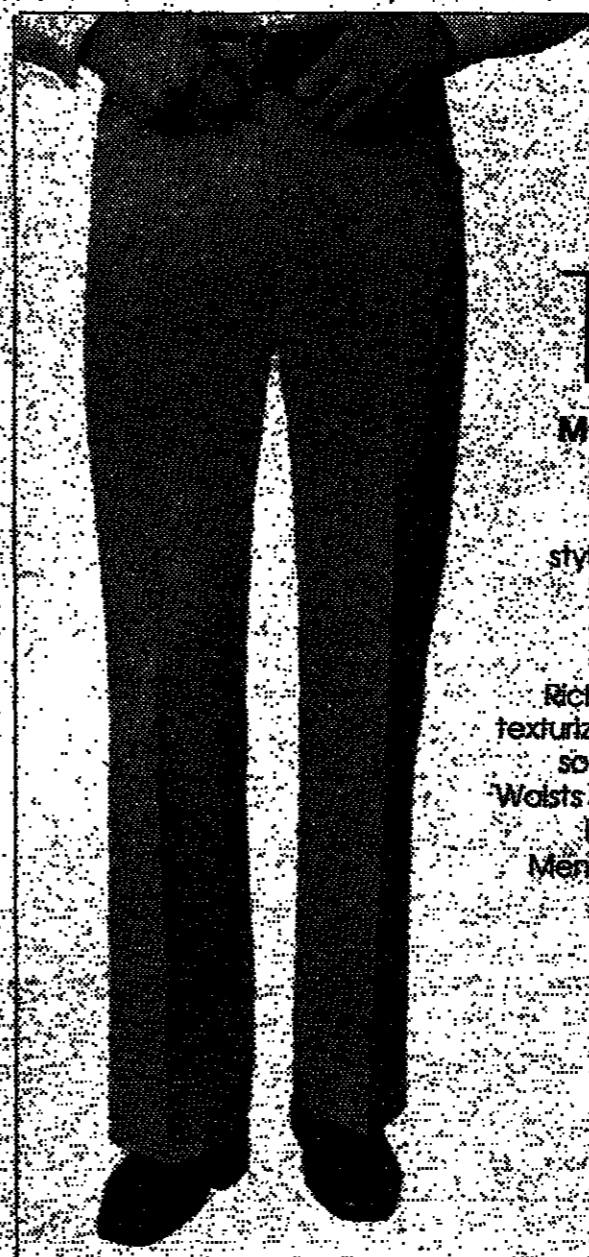

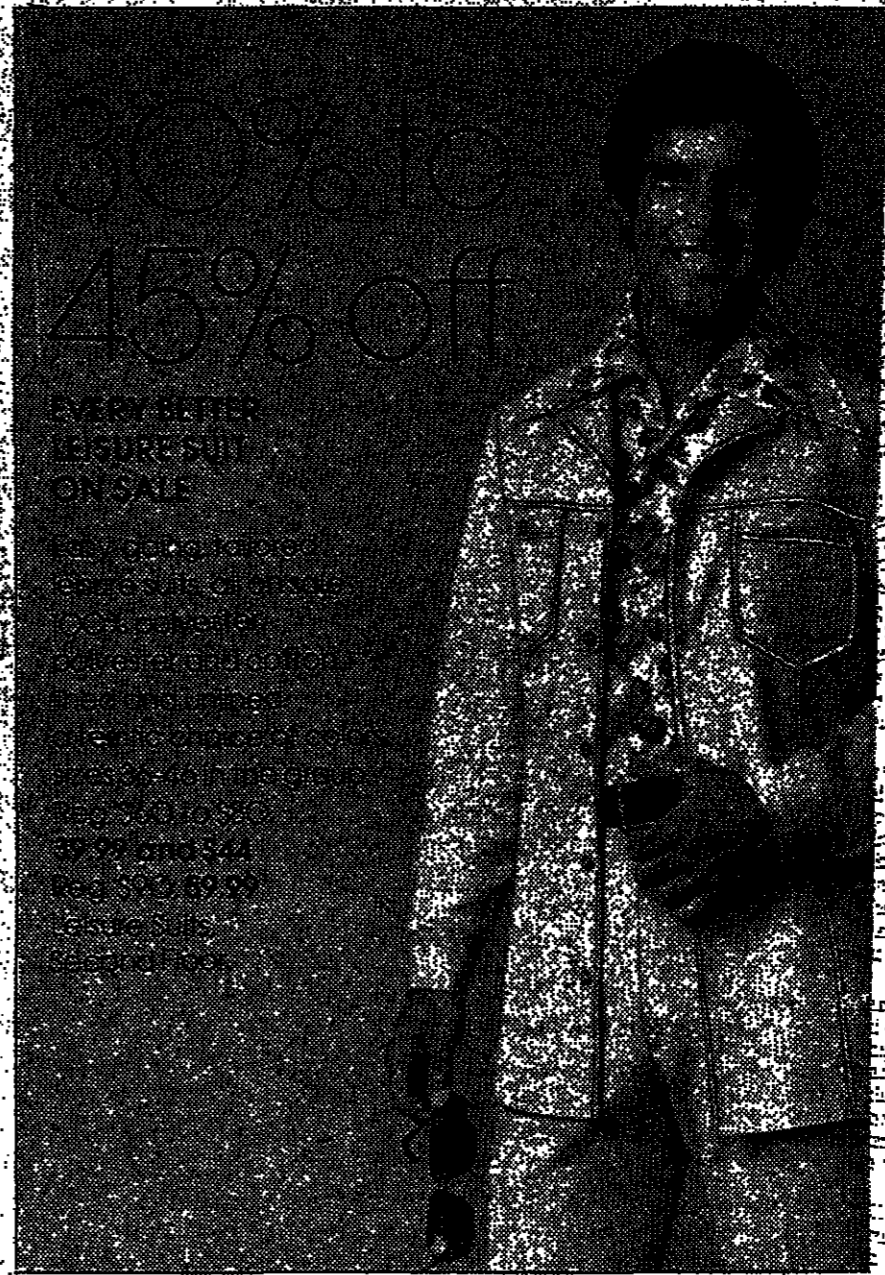

"This is the last straw. If the United States really does not want friendly relations with our country to be upset, it must finally put an end to new crimes. It must promise this publicly, and also achieve this."

SHOP EVE

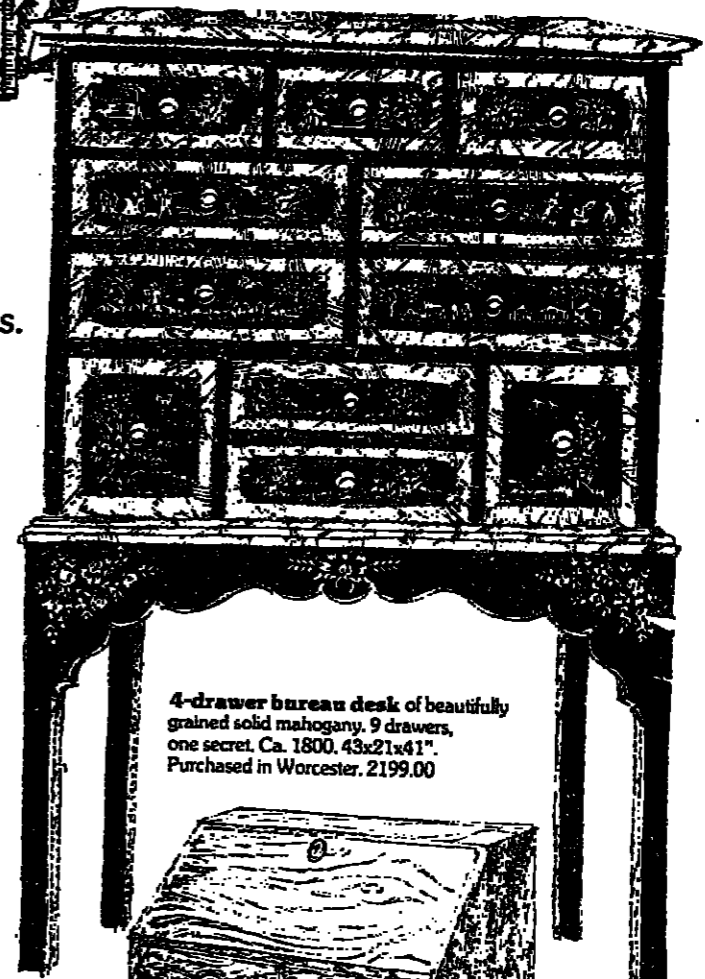

We are in receipt of a very fine collection of English antique of the 18th and 19th centuries

Do come over and give it the once-over

Bow front chest with drop front writing surface in top drawer. 6 small satinwood veneer front compartments, rest of desk is solid mahogany and mahogany veneer with satinwood cross banding. Ca. 1830. 43 1/2 x 22 1/2 x 41 1/2" high. Purchased in Dorchester on Thames. 1349.00

Chinoiserie-type chest on stand with attractive decoration on front and ends. 10 drawers. 39 1/2 x 18 1/2 x 62 1/2" high. Ca. 1720. Purchased in London. 3500.00

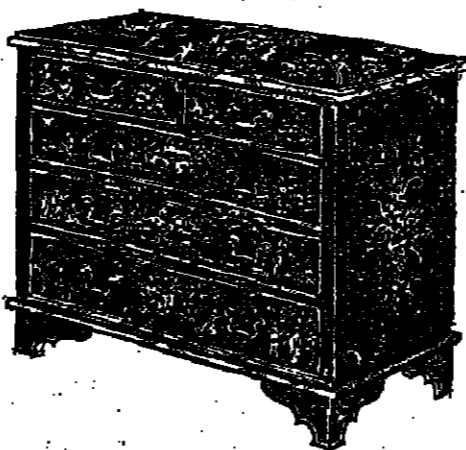

Now, when furniture of this quality is becoming scarcer and scarcer, you can choose from dozens of pieces that represent the finest English design and craftsmanship of the 18th and 19th centuries.

You'll find rich, glossy mahogany, that may have reflected candlelight in the parlor of an old London townhouse. Sturdy oak for a game table where many a rubber of whist might have been contested in a Sussex mansion. Chinoiserie on a lacquer chest, perhaps made for a Naval Person nostalgic for his travels to the Orient.

Each old English treasure is the only one of its kind. Any one of them would be a beautiful way to bring the romantic flavor and patina of the past into your own home today.

White House Is Emphasizing New U.S. Aims in Africa

—the leaders of Zambia, Tanzania, Mozambique and Botswana—who are trying to put together a unified black Rhodesian liberation front out of the welter of competing fronts to negotiate now with the white regime in Salisbury.

Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld returned yesterday from Africa, where he negotiated major military aid programs with leaders in Kenya and Zaire with a view to developing their abilities against Soviet-backed governments in Somalia, Uganda, and Angola. If Congress approves these programs, the United States could be on its way to becoming the main source of arms to these countries and Ethiopia.

Scranton Shows the Flag

William W. Scanton, the United States delegate to the United Nations, has embarked on a tour of several African countries "to keep showing the flag," as an official put it, and to discuss United Nations matters and economic aid.

These diplomatic actions, excluding the military aid programs in central Africa, amount to a virtual adoption of the policies of his liberal critics and are, officials acknowledged, a new means to the end of containing Soviet influence, or, as it is now called, keeping superpower conflicts from Africa.

But Mr. Kissinger has been muting the anti-Soviet line that he promoted when the Administration was involved in Angola. He was partly persuaded to do this, officials said, by African leaders who told him during his visit two months ago that, while they shared his concern about the Russians, he appeared more concerned with Russian influence than African rights.

Officials said that Mr. Kissinger also came to believe that he could tone down the rhetoric about the Soviet Union because his past threats have proved successful. The officials maintained that the Russians and the Cubans had indicated that their intervention in Angola was a special case, and that they would not directly intervene in Rhodesia. Mr. Kissinger introduced the new policy with a speech in Lusaka, Zambia, two months ago in which he pledged to seek Congressional approval of aid to those countries whose economies were most damaged by closing their borders to trade with Rhodesia and repeal of the Byrd amendment, which permits the United States to import Rhodesian chrome in violation of United Nations sanctions. The speech also contained pledges to move on the diplomatic front by pressing for settlements on Rhodesia and South-West Africa, which is governed by South Africa in defiance of the United Nations.

Congress is expected to approve $75 million in economic aid for the front-line black countries in the Rhodesian war, including $27.5 million for Zambia. In a deal worked out behind closed doors, liberal legislators and the Administration agreed to use $10 million in transitional budget funds for Mozambique plus $4 million in food aid. This $14 million constitutes

Turkish Cypriots-Crossing 'Federated State' Leaders

NICOSIA, Cyprus, June 20 (UPI)—Turkish Cypriots voted today to elect a President and a 40-member Assembly for their self-proclaimed "Federated State" in northern Cyprus.

The Greek Cypriot majority does not recognize the election as valid. A spokesman for President Makarios' Government declined to comment. The election was seen as a further move by the Turks to consolidate the island's division. Turkish Cypriot leader Rauf Denktaş said yesterday that the election was "a kind of self-determination referendum confirming the Turks' separate status." Final results are expected tomorrow.

The "Turkish-Federated State of Cyprus" was proclaimed 15 months ago, with Mr. Denktaş named "President." It is recognized only by Turkey, which invaded the island on July 15, 1974.

almost 25 percent of the projected trade damage to Mozambique and is regarded as an important element in associating the United States with the black liberation cause without actually paying the black guerrillas directly.

The White House let it be known that the President did not want much visibility on this issue. The same is true of repeal of the Byrd amendment, named after its principal sponsor, Senator Harry F. Byrd, Independent of Virginia. Several officials said that Mr. Ford might seek legislative action on this symbolic but important matter in the Senate in the fall. The chances of repeal by the House are thought to be poor. "We don't want to take the chance of losing on this one," a White House official said.

Ford's Support Noted

Mr. Ford's main concern has been that former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California could continue to use these issues against him with Republican conservatives. White House aides insisted, however, that Mr. Ford does and will support the new Africa policy because it is right and because he does not want to create problems with his relatively popular Secretary of State before the November elections.

In the meantime, Mr. Ford continues to encourage diplomatic activity to head off the kind of all-out fighting in Rhodesia and increasing guerrilla warfare in South-West Africa that might once again tempt the Soviet Union and Cuba to intervene.

In what are being described as exploratory talks with Mr. Vorster, Mr. Kissinger is expected to stress mutual interests in rapidly achieving peaceful settlements in Rhodesia and South-West Africa while avoiding any identification with South African white supremacist policies. Officials expect Mr. Vorster to seek closer association with the United States, perhaps by proposing continuing consultations.

Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Vorster both appear to be operating on the assumption that the faster these problems are resolved, the more time South Africa will have to adjust its own internal situation. The Administration has publicly sidestepped the issue of black majority rule in South Africa, while explicitly calling for such rule in Rhodesia and South-West Africa. In South Africa, where the roots of the white community are almost as deep as the black, the Administration has called for self-determination and an end to the legal separation of the races.

Knowledgeable officials said that Mr. Kissinger would avoid attempts by Mr. Vorster to put the United States in the position of mediator in the Rhodesian struggle. They said that the South African leader should not be misled by campaign rhetoric in thinking that the United States would intervene in Rhodesia—even if Cubans were involved. One official explained: "If we point-blank ask Vorster for something, he'd make demands in return, but we won't do it that way. Vorster has already gotten a lot from us just by virtue of Kissinger's being willing to meet with him."

Meanwhile, State Department officials are hoping that African leaders from whose countries the guerrillas are operating will use their influence to promote compromises. The four presidents have real control now if they want to use it, but once the fighting becomes grisly, they'll lose control, and they don't want that any more than we do," one official said.

Administration officials regard what they are now trying to do in central Africa as perhaps as far-reaching in its consequences as events in southern Africa. Mr. Rumsfeld has been firming up arms sales agreements with Kenya and Zaire that officials described as only first steps in modernizing their armed forces. Kenya would receive about $75 million for 12 F-5 jet fighters and Zaire about $50 million for armored vehicles and anti-air weapons.

A ranking State Department official, commenting on where things now stood on American policy, said: "Despite obstacles since the Kissinger trip, a new direction is set. Even if this Administration accomplishes little, the policy is there for the next one."

South African in the Eye of the Storm

James Thomas Kruger

Special to The New York Times
JOHANNESBURG, June 20—When, less than three months ago, James Thomas Kruger said at a dinner in honor of Prime Minister John Vorster that there was "no chance of a large-scale insurgency" among the country's 18 million blacks, few in South Africa challenged him.

In recent days, Mr. Kruger, as Minister of Justice, Police and Prisons, has been in overall charge of efforts to suppress the most violent rioting the country has had in 65 years.

The 59-year-old minister was left in no doubt of what Mr. Vorster expected. The Prime Minister said that law and order must be restored "at all costs."

Speaking in Parliament after the first 48 hours of the rioting, with dozens already dead, Mr. Kruger said his patience was at an end.

"I have given them two days to show their opinions," he said, referring to angry crowds of blacks who were destroying anything representative of authority. "This is enough. It is my task to maintain law and order. Murder and arson is a very serious matter. My task is to free South Africa of hoodlums."

A Look Beyond Police Power
However, when relative calm returned to the townships and emotions subsided, Mr. Kruger was the first senior official to acknowledge that the Government would have to go beyond the mere exercise of its police powers and investigate the passions that were vented in the rioting.

In an interview with The Sunday Times of Johannesburg Mr. Kruger said that the Government could not ignore a growing "black anger." In another context this would have sounded like a minor palliative, but in the case of closed camp of Afrikaner na-nationalism it had the ring of a major concession.

The combination of tough action with reflective thinking is characteristic of a man who has puzzled many of South Africa's political commentators since he took over the justice portfolio two years ago. In a world in which politicians are commonly labeled as "verlight" or "verkramp" (hard-line—Mr. Kruger has proved difficult to pin down.)

Such is his reputation that one of the country's leading editors, a liberal, spoke sympathetically of the Justice Minister's position. "You can't help feeling sorry for him," the editor said as he looked over photographs of gutted buildings and casualties of the gunfire. "What has happened is that he's been landed with a flaming baby that was not of his own creation but the fruit of mismanagement by other people in the Government."

The editor said he considered those principally responsible for the outbreak were M. C. Botha, the Minister of Bantu Administration and Development, and his deputy, Andries P. Treurnicht.

Sparked by Language Issue
The ministry's failure to respond to students' demands, for revocation of a regulation requiring Afrikaners as teaching language in black schools, led to the initial trouble in Soweto, the largest of the black townships. Perhaps significantly, Mr. Kruger offered no defense of Mr. Botha or Mr. Treurnicht in Parliament, despite repeated calls by the opposition for their resignation. In the view of many political commentators, he—and perhaps Mr. Vorster as well—felt that intransigence on the language issue had precipitated a disaster that could have been avoided.

Mr. Kruger—pronounced CREE-URR—is known universally as Jimmy. He was born in the Afrikaner stronghold of the Orange Free State, in the farming center of Bethlehem, on Dec. 20, 1917. The Krugers were farmers but, like many Afrikaners of his generation, young Kruger foresook agriculture and became a Transvaal gold miner in his teens.

He earned two degrees, one in law, attending the English-speaking Witwatersrand University when it was still uncommon for Afrikaners to do so. Eventually he entered politics, taking a seat in Parliament in Pretoria, the capital. He was brought into the Government by Mr. Vorster as Deputy Minister of Police and the Interior, and was promoted to his present position in 1974.

Wife Is a Novelist
Mr. Kruger's wife, Susanna, is a novelist. Recently she produced a television film, "Ten Years of John Vorster," that won acclaim at $45-a-plate Nationalist Party dinners. The Krugers have two sons. Mr. Kruger is fond of golfing and fishing and is a rugby fan.

In his years in the Government Mr. Kruger has steered an uncertain course between reaction and reform. He has engaged at times in displays of "Kragadagheit," or forcefulness. At other times he has proposed measures to ease apartheid that have enraged hard-liners in the ruling Nationalist Party.

Equality With a But
When he shows toughness, he can say, as he did at a party congress in 1973: "All men are equal before God, but all men are not equal before man because the differences are obvious." In his reformist mood he has acted to desegregate some of the best hotels and restaurants and relax the censorship laws a bit.

Viking 1 Continues Orbit of Mars; Path Closer to Planet Is Planned

PASADENA, Calif., June 20 (AP)—The Viking 1 spacecraft continued on its first wide sweep around Mars today as its controllers on earth devised a lower orbit, suitable for studying the Martian valley picked out for a July 4 landing.

Their calculations were to result in a new command to the unmanned Viking, designed to move it into a less elliptical orbit tomorrow. The new circuit would bring the craft over its planned landing site once each 24.6-hour Martian day.

Once settled in that orbit, Viking is to scan the mouth of the valley for any hazards that could damage the robot laboratory that will leave the Viking and descend to the surface.

Other studies also will be made, beginning Tuesday, of temperature differences across the Martian surface and of the water content of its atmosphere.

Viking 1, which has a companion ship following 10 million miles behind, arrived near Mars yesterday, fired a 38-minute braking burst and swung into orbit. Mission officials described the crucial maneuver as "perfect."

The mission's director, Tom

Young, noted that the flawless orbit maneuver after the 440-million-mile journey from the earth was a "significant feat," but only a giant first step in Viking's search for life on Mars.

Certifying the landing site safe for touchdown, a process taking at least 10 days, was to have started today, according to the original plan. But a mechanical problem, since solved, forced controllers at Jet Propulsion Laboratory here in Pasadena to send Viking into a longer first orbit that would not put the ship into position for starting its observations until Tuesday.

Nevertheless, Mr. Young said, "We feel confident we have the proper time-line" to survey the site. "If we are not satisfied with the data, we will delay the landing if that is the safe and proper thing to do," he added.

A short rocket blast tomorrow morning is to send Viking into its shorter orbit around the planet, which is about twice as big as earth's moon and half as big as the earth. On the new course, Viking would come 20,000 miles out at its most distant point.

EVACUATED SEA WEST ROUTE

ivoy to Syria's Too Risky

ON, June 20, relaxed today n of a naval op- ordered last eve Americans and civilians from given the order operation at 6 after conclud- Flind Drive.

ing that an attempt to extricate the civilians overland to Syria was too risky because of re- peated artillery and small-arm- fire along the route.

He made the decision after consulting with Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, Deputy Defense Secretary William P. Clements Jr. and Gen. George S. Brown, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The naval operation, involving a single landing craft of the Mediterranean-based Sixth Fleet, was selected after it was decided that helicopters might be subject to ground fire. The Defense Department transmitted orders to the Sixth Fleet at 1:23 A.M. eastern daylight time. It was called Operation Flind Drive.

The landing craft, carrying 10 unarmed sailors, was set off from its mother ship, the Spiegel Grove, a landing-ship dock.

Al Fatah, one force in the Palestine Liberation Organization, provided escorts for the civilians assembling on the beach. Mr. Ford said later, "The P.L.O. and all other parties in Lebanon cooperated completely in making it possible for us to evacuate the Americans and the other nationals without incident."

Asked whether the Administration had expected more of the 1,400 American citizens estimated to be living in Lebanon to take advantage of the chance to leave Beirut, a top-ranking official said: "We are not surprised. The

1,400 figure was misleading. A lot are dual nationals who felt no ties with the United States and decided to stay." [Last week in Beirut, the American Embassy put the number of Americans at 1,800.]

He added that some American citizens may have had difficulty crossing battle lines to reach the evacuation assembly point on the beach, and that others may have been suspicious of the safety or even the necessity of the operation.

Mr. Ford spent the early morning hours in the basement "situation room" of the west wing of the White House, reading and listening to reports from Beirut until a little after 5:16 A.M. It was learned then that the landing craft was on its way to the mother ship, three miles off shore. Stopping in the White House press room, he said he was "very pleased." Then he went to bed for about three hours.

A high-ranking Administration official said the decision to send in a landing craft had been made "because the road to Damascus still wasn't open and we didn't want to let the situation drift on."

"We might try it again," he said of the naval operation. In a statement issued this afternoon, Mr. Ford expressed "heartfelt thanks" to the armed forces and State Department for successful completion of the operation.

Defective Machines Delay Uzbekistan Grain Harvest

MOSCOW, June 20 (Reuters)—Mechanical trouble with combine harvesters is hampering this year's first grain harvest in the Soviet Union. Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper, said today.

The paper complained of "serious shortcomings" in Uzbekistan, the first Soviet Republic to start harvesting. In one area, nearly 100 of the 300 harvesters available here not being used because of poor maintenance and mismanagement, Pravda said.

After last year's poor harvest of 140 million tons, one-third less the target, Soviet farmers are being urged to spare no ef-

11 Guerrillas Reported Slain in Gun Battles in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES, June 20 (AP)—Eleven left-wing guerrillas were killed early today in two gun battles along a railroad line south of Buenos Aires, the army announced.

There also were reports that seven bullet-riddled bodies were found near the port city of La Plata, 20 miles south of the capital. They were believed to be the victims of right-wing death squads.

Among the bodies were those of a young couple. They had been burned, and a poster on the woman's charred body said, "I killed Gen. Cardoso."

U.S. Navy Evacuates 263 From Beirut With Palestinians

ened concern in Washington for the safety of Americans here stemmed from the killings last Wednesday in Beirut of the United States Ambassador, Francis E. Meloy Jr.; his economic adviser, Robert O. Waring, and Zohair Mohrabi, a Lebanese employee of the embassy, who was their body-guard-driver.

Though Washington had cited the danger of shooting along the overland route to Damascus, many Americans here assumed that President Ford's decision to order a sea-borne evacuation—code-named Operation Fluid Drive—was inspired by political motives.

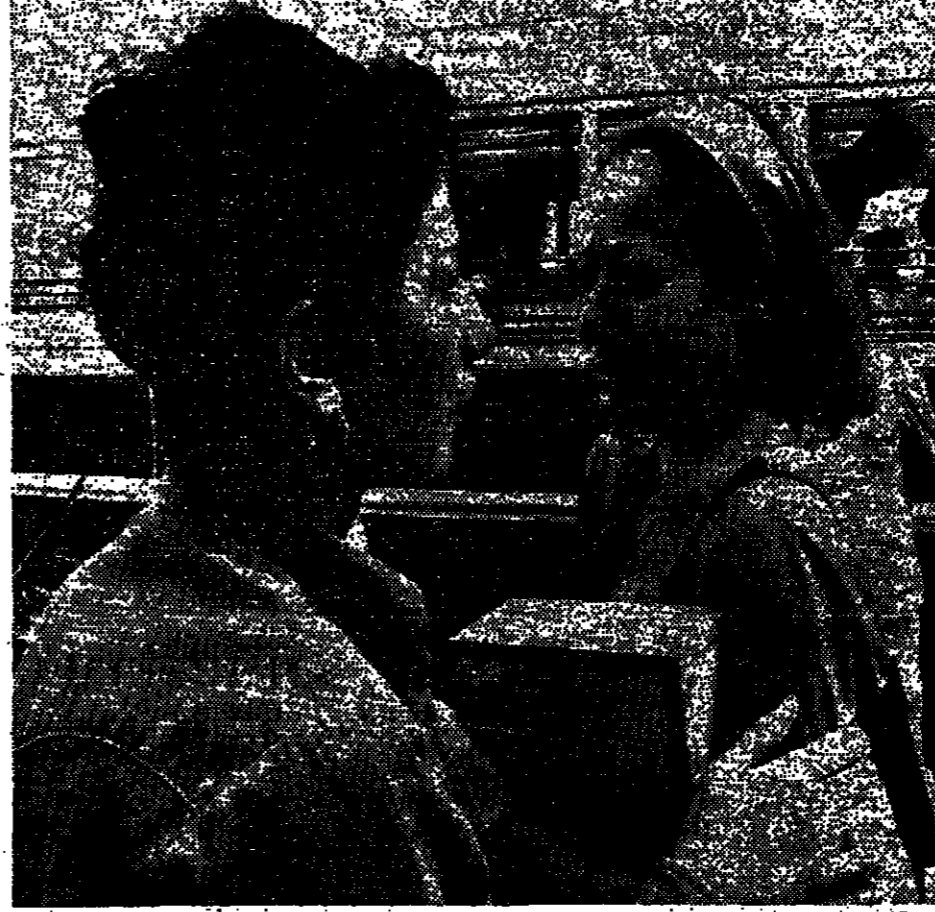

Some here were calling it "Operation Iowa Primary," an inaccurate allusion to Mr. Ford's winning of 19 of that state's delegates in the Iowa Republican convention yesterday at Des Moines, against 17 for Ronald Reagan. Iowa does not hold primary elections. Mr. Ford had called off a trip to Iowa and remained in Washington to keep vigil over developments in Lebanon.

Not a "Shuttle Service" George B. Lambrakis, the American who is charged d'affaires since the killing of Ambassador Meloy, said that the sea-borne evacuation would not necessarily be repeated.

"I think it's pretty clear it's not going to be a shuttle service," said Mr. Lambrakis, who oversaw the operation, attired in a seersucker suit. Some evacuees wanted to take their cars and large amounts of luggage, which was not permitted. Many people who might have gone were put off by the loss of large pets and by reports of animal quarantines in Piraeus, the port of Athens—or by the prospect of the 40-hour voyage.

"Yes, we had planned to go," said a disappointed Leslie Cobb, a 17-year-old American, sitting on the floor of the crowded Riviera Hotel lobby with two Shetland sheepdogs, Harvey and Jackson.

"But now there's a boat, we're not going to go," she continued. "We're going to drive."

A woman who stayed in Beirut cried as she bid farewell to her daughter, who left.

could write first-hand accounts of the evacuation. "It's going to be great—I've got 48 hours to write one story," said Doyle McManus of United Press International.

Christopher W. S. Ross, an American Embassy spokesman, said a preliminary count showed that a total of 116 United States citizens and family members and 147 "third-country nationals" had joined the surprise sea evacuation.

He said that about 60 Britons, 20 Germans, 10 Italians and 10 Greeks were included in the second category. The American officials had agreed to a special request from the Lebanese Arab Army, which has been guarding the embassy building, to take late," said Mrs. Debs, who explained that she had wanted to join her husband, an airline pilot, who is out of the country. "The Beirut airport is occupied by Syrian troops and has been closed for two weeks.

Security for the evacuation, apparently arranged by the British, was begun early in the morning by the Fatah Palestinian organization and some of its leftist allies. At dawn, roads leading down to the Bain Militaire, which once served as the headquarters of the Lebanese Arab Army, an organization of Moslem defectors from the Lebanese Army, were sealed off by gunmen in jeeps and Land-Rovers.

Christian Gunners Warned American officials were reliably reported to have warned artillerymen of the Lebanese Christian forces, who have in the past heavily bombarded the Bain Militaire area, to keep their guns silent this morning. One American noted wryly that among the vans providing protection for the evacuation was one that had been stolen from the embassy.

In charge of the operation was Abu Pirass, a high-ranking Fatah security official. The only moment of slight tension occurred just after the landing craft docked, when Arab Army soldiers fired three shots into the air to ward off television cameramen who crowded around the evacuation site.

A few American sailors on the landing craft took cover, though no one else was particularly upset by the shots. At a beach club overlooking the concrete pier where the evacuation took place, a waiter served journalists 7-Up, orange crush and coffee. A few Lebanese came to wave good-bye to friends and relatives.

Officially, American diplomats are not permitted to have contact with members of the Palestine Liberation Organization, but actual cooperation on the evacuation operation was intimate.

"We are a group of Al Fatah," a man in a blue jean suit, who gave his name as Mohammed, Telford Jr., the embassy security chief, had returned for last year's American election from Phnom Penh.

Among the Lebanese Palestinians who were foreigners leave Beirut, the prevailing mood was pessimistic.

"We don't want to stay here," said 52-year-old Zaidine, a volunteer Lebanese Arab Army soldier. Mrs. Debs missed the landing and wanted them to stay with her friends.

On his waist, Tina, who said he had a gold emblem of the United States Marine Corps, was a Palestinian.

A young Palestinian watched the foreigner to their friends as craft pulled away, and begged so sad," she said. "All Othman, a Palestinian, also watched the departure from his b. Manara section of and was struck by number of people the landing craft. "My reaction is Americans don't w. he said.

The embassy's citizens in Lebanon showed that 870 citizens and 245 dependents lived in heavily Moslem Beirut where the Bain Militaire. A total of cans and dependents counted in all of SUMMER IS GIVE FRESH A. "Another official, Sidney T.

Evacuees, who gathered at Hotel Riviera and at British Embassy, embarked for trip to Athens at Bain Militaire.

Her father, John Cobb, a consulting engineer from Atlanta, said: "I have faith that the British will get us out. A lot of people we've talked to think there are a lot of political motivations in a big Navy ship coming in—what with Mr. Reagan criticizing our Panama Canal policy."

Ban on Pets Eased Slightly Another resident American engineer, Carl Peterson, a native of Hamden, Conn., explained his reluctance to take the ship: "If I don't take the cats, my wife will divorce me."

In the end, American officials relaxed what they said was a standing Navy ban on pets, and at least two dogs, one cat and a bird—a yellow budgerigar named Sleeper, belonging to Marilyn Raschaa, an English schoolteacher—were seen going aboard No. 1654, a 135-ton L.L.U. (large unit utility).

The atmosphere surrounding the evacuation was hardly one of high tension. Foreigners in Beirut have become quite accustomed to mingling with grizzled gunmen and hearing odd explosions and automatic gunfire—and before the 1954 left the former military officers club beach, one soldier from the renegade Lebanese Arab Army, wearing a green Hawaiian-style sport shirt, was fraternizing with a few American sailors.

"Have a nice cruise," said Dr. Samuel Asper, the head of the American University Hospital, bidding goodbye to friends at the Riviera. The doctor, along with most of the embassy staff, is remaining in Beirut.

"I really don't consider this an evacuation," said the 31-year-old Miss Raschaa. "It's just a convenient way to get out of the country."

2 Girls Off for Camp Al Buckley, a longtime American resident, saw off two of his daughters, Isabelle, 15, and Marianne, 13, who are going to a summer camp near Lebanon, N.H.

Rita Alanne, a Finnish stewardess for the grounded Middle East Airlines, said that she was going to Helsinki because her mother had died, but that she expected to return in two weeks. Miss Alanne was attentively escorted by several sailors as she climbed aboard the Navy landing craft, which docked near a bathers' ladder in a small cove.

At least 19 journalists joined the evacuees, some so that they

CLARITY

By Mark Thoms
Beirut, June 20 — The Arab League general assembly, which is expected to meet in Beirut this week, is expected to clarify the initial phase of the Arab peace-keeping force in Lebanon in the next few days.

It is expected that the force will be made up of about 1,000 troops, at least a share of the force will be made up of Arab troops.

Other Arab officials in recent days have been shuttling between Beirut and Damascus in recent days, as well as to other Arab capitals.

France's 'Missing' Uranium Traced to a Natural Chain Reaction Eons Ago

By WALTER SULLIVAN

Details of a series of events that erroneously made it appear that 440 pounds of uranium 235 were missing from the "pipeline" feeding uranium to the French atomic bomb project have recently become known through a series of interviews with French physicists.

The episode, in 1972, led to fears that the material had been stolen in a terrorist plot, possibly directed against then President Charles de Gaulle.

Later that year, the explanation was made public: Millions of years ago, chain reactions (in which the splitting of one atom to the splitting of others in series) in the African mine from which the ore was being obtained had burned up the "missing" material. So far as is known, however, the story behind that discovery has never been fully told.

Apparent Discrepancies

The alarm began in June 1972, when apparent discrepancies were discovered in the inventories of uranium passing through the gaseous diffusion plant at Pierrelatte, France's counterpart to the American plant at Oak Ridge, Tenn., where weapons-grade uranium is separated from the raw metal.

As noted by the physicist interviewed, this was a time when memories of the turmoil associated with France's 1962 withdrawal from Algeria were still vivid. In fact, the plot of a 1971 novel, "The Day of the J'accuse," by Frederic Forsyth, involved an attempt by disgruntled French Army officers to assassinate President de Gaulle. Adding to the uneasiness was the discovery that Soviet agents had penetrated high-level circles in the French Government (described in "Topaz," a novel by Leon Uris published in 1967), and diplomatic rumblings over a report that an American U-2 spy plane had flown over the Pierrelatte plant.

3 Less Neutrons

Naturally occurring uranium consists almost entirely of uranium 238, so called because its nucleus is formed of 238 protons and neutrons. Only uranium 235, with three less neutrons, can be split to release nuclear energy either in a bomb or power plant.

Because uranium 235 represents less than 1 percent of uranium ore, the ore must be processed to enrich the percentage of uranium 235.

There are several ways to do this, all demanding high levels of technology. The plant at Pierrelatte used the gaseous diffusion method.

French physicists, like most of their colleagues elsewhere, believed that natural uranium, no matter where found, would contain precisely 0.7202 percent uranium 235. Yet a routine analysis at Pierrelatte showed only 0.7171 percent in the batch most recently processed there.

According to Pierre Corbet, who was conducting the ura-anium inventories, samples were sent to three laboratories to make sure that there was no error in the analysis. None was found. Furthermore, it began to appear that some uranium batches were far more depleted in uranium 235.

Under great secrecy, the investigators drew up and systematically explored a list of possible explanations. One was that the French standard of uranium percentage was wrong. A group of scientists was sent to the National Bureau of Standards in the United States to make a comparison with the American standard; it proved to be identical.

Another hypothesis was that nature, in some way, had been able to change the mix of uranium types, or isotopes, without the high technology that physicists required. No one could think of a plausible process.

An 'Outrageous Idea'

This left the possibility of theft or, as Mr. Corbet put it, "the most outrageous idea of all"—that nature itself depleted the uranium by producing a chain reaction similar to that finally achieved by physicists at the University of Chicago in 1942 after the most sophisticated calculations and preparations.

The uranium in question was traced through the two plants in France where it was processed before delivery to Pierrelatte and then to the plant at Mouanza in Gabon, Africa, where it was concentrated after being mined at two nearby sites. Samples of each batch of ore processed there had been preserved and it was found that, between December 1970 and May 1972, the ore was deficient in uranium 235 by a total amounting to 200 kilograms (440 pounds). The ore, it was found, had come from the north end of the mine at Oklo.

The French Atomic Energy Commission instigated a detailed study under Dr. Roger Naudet. The findings were reported a year ago at a conference in Gabon and have been summarized by Dr. Naudet in La Recherche, a French magazine similar to Scientific American.

Rich in Uranium

It has been found that, while ore from the Oklo mine contains on the average only 0.5 percent uranium, in six small regions of a few hundred tons each the proportion becomes as high as 40 percent or more.

Furthermore, the extent to which the ore had been depleted in uranium 235 by nuclear reactions closely follows the richness of the ore in natural uranium. In some areas, more than half the uranium 235 has vanished.

It was in these areas of relatively pure uranium that the "critical mass" necessary for a chain reaction existed. The reactions apparently began about 1.8 billion years ago, when natural uranium was composed of 3 percent uranium 235.

radioactively faster than uranium 235, its relative abundance has decreased steadily throughout this part of the universe. Today, a natural chain reaction could no longer occur. The reactions apparently took place intermittently over a period between 100,000 and a million years long.

The energy released was comparable to that produced by a large (1,000 megawatt) atomic plant over one year. Being spread over a long time, however, it did not generate heat higher than 400 degrees Fahrenheit, as indicated by heat alteration in nearby rock.

Radiation from the reactions also transformed atoms in that rock. These and the products of uranium atom-splitting constituted radioactive waste comparable to that troubling developers of today's nuclear industry. So much time has elapsed, however, that the products have decayed into innocuous forms.

Little Movement Found

Of interest to those hoping to dispose of such wastes underground has been the observation that, over a million-year period, the Oklo waste products did not move very far. Not did the depleted uranium, even though it is readily transported by water. There is great concern today that water transport underground could transport radioactive wastes to areas where they would be harmful to life.

But the Oklo experience is not considered a realistic test of what water transport could do to radioactive waste. Dr.

Naudet believes that this formation, although originally produced by water action, subsequently was deeply buried and isolated from water and other sources of disturbance, until relatively recently.

Water had to be present during the period of nuclear activity to slow the neutrons produced by the atom splitting. Such slowing is essential so that the neutrons will then split other atoms—the essence of a chain reaction.

A few hundred million years ago, according to the now widely accepted theory of continental drift, Gabon was snug against Brazil, and French physicists believe that "fossil" reactors may be found in uranium deposits there.

Last April, Dr. Ernest A. Bryant of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory in New Mexico told the American Chemical Society that uranium mined in that state was slightly depleted in uranium 235, suggesting that chain reactions may have occurred there more than 600 million years ago.

That such reactions would have been possible long ago, when natural uranium was richer in the 235 isotope, was proposed in the United States as early as 1956 by P. J. Kuroda, but most physicists thought this highly unlikely.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED CHANGES IN TELEPHONE RATE SCHEDULES

Notice is hereby given that the following tariff amendments or substitutions of the rates, COM KEY-416 Service, have been filed for Commission action to be effective June 26, 1976.

DESCRIPTION OF SERVICE
The COM KEY-416 Service is a key telephone system with a line, 16 telephone instruments and 2 intercommunication or transfer multi-button telephones, in busy with a choice of 3 facsimile, each equipped to pick up all the lines terminating the lines appear in the same sequence at each station. Two top sets, Common Equipment Stations and Basic Stations are used. Equipment Station also contains the control circuitry for the 2 and the common of 2 control office lines, one intercommunication Basic Station. The use of two Common Equipment Station ultimate system capacity.

The basic features of the service are pick-up, wink to multi-line conferencing, button restoration, facility ringing station selection on intercommunication paths, tone ringing signaling on intercommunication paths and facility loading features, as described in the tariff, also are available at add-on rates.

RATE STRUCTURE
COM KEY 416 Service is offered under three rate options: (a) 1, 2 and 3. Under Option 1, the service is offered on the monthly rate and installation charges, which are subject to Options 2 and 3. The monthly rates for the service and facilities are: "A" and "B." The subscriber has the option of a payment period of 24, 36 or 48 months. The selected "A" rate against Company-initiated change. The "B" part of the most subject to change, from the date of installation. EVEREST CLIMBERS TO STUDY SURVIVAL

Professors to Monitor Body Processes of Mountaineers Struggling Up Peak

By EVERETT R. HOLLES
Special to The New York Times

LO JOLLA, Calif., June 19—An international team of medical experts using telemetry equipment carried on the Apollo moon missions will climb Mount Everest next spring to study the physiological effects on man at the extreme limit of his ability to survive on the earth's surface.

From climbers at the top of the 29,028-foot peak in the Himalayas, five university professors hope to gain important new knowledge about the most critical stages of heart and respiratory diseases, blood and hormone changes, metabolic imbalance and the many complexities of oxygen deficiency. The medical team will go as far as a camp at 20,000 feet, with professional climbers going on to the summit.

The expedition from Britain, New Zealand and the United States will include 10 professional mountain climbers wearing radio-linked body sensors and miniature tape recorders to monitor constantly their responses at and near the summit of Everest, where the oxygen pressure is barely sufficient to sustain life.

The American member of the medical team, Dr. John B. West, head of the University of California's school of medicine here, will be in charge of the cardiovascular and respiratory experiments of the expedition, which is scheduled to begin its climb in March.

Watching Vital Signs

"We will be watching, night and day, the vital signs of men struggling upwards under tremendous physical stress toward the absolute limit of man's tolerance on the face of the earth," he said.

This fall, American members of the expedition will begin testing equipment in California's High Sierras.

A large contingent of Sherpa guides will join the expedition at Katmandu, Nepal, for a three-week trek to the 9,000 or 10,000-foot takeoff point for the climb of Everest's south ridge.

Heading the physiologists will be Dr. Michael Ward of the University of London, who was a member of Sir Edmund Hillary's 1953 expedition that was the first to reach the summit of the world's highest mountain, which straddles the Nepal-Tibet border.

The others will be Dr. James Milledge and Dr. Edward Williams, also of the University of London; Michael Gill of the University of Auckland in New Zealand, and Dr. West.

Base Camp at 20,000 Feet

The 10 professional climbers led by Arnold Reine of New Zealand will strike out for the peak while the medical men maintain round-the-clock communication with them from an advance base camp at the 20,000-foot level. The climbers will also be an international team, all veterans familiar with the challenges of Mount Everest.

Of the five medical men, all but Dr. Williams participated on a similar expedition in 1961 to within about 4,000 feet of the 27,824-foot summit of Mount Makalu, sister peak of Everest.

Dr. West, said in an interview that the new venture would have a great advantage over the 1961 climb because of the miniaturized body sensors, radio transponders and other telemetry equipment developed for the Apollo missions and made available by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The most important medical data will be collected over the final 4,000 feet to the top of Mount Everest, he said.

"Physiologically, those last 4,000 feet are the most fascinating for us, because the oxygen pressure becomes just sufficient to sustain life," he said.

Aid to Treatment Seen

"We will be getting data from the climbers' hearts and lungs that will help us to better understand what happens in the most critical stages of illness and may eventually lead to more effective treatment for cardiovascular and respiratory diseases.

"On the final leg to the summit, the instrumented climbers will give us a unique opportunity to look at hypoxic stress, such as occurs in advanced coronary and pulmonary cases where the lungs fail to oxygenate the blood properly and the oxygen levels in the arteries fall to very low levels."

He said that it was reasonable to expect that the effects of the enervating altitude on professional climbers in top physical condition could "help us to better understand the symptoms of patients suffering acute respiratory failure."

Other members of the medical team will concentrate on such studies as muscle metabolism, hormone changes and the effect of oxygen deficiency on food absorption. Dr. West said that mountain climbers frequently lost up to three pounds a week while the same amount of exertion at lower levels caused no weight loss.

The expedition will be internationally financed, Dr. West said, including a grant from the National Institutes of Health in Washington.

Tchula, Miss., One of 1,600 Towns in Nation Looking for a Doctor

By NANCY HICKS
Special to The New York Times

TCHULA, Miss.—Tchula, like many other small towns around the country, is looking for a doctor.

By the end of the month, Ronald W. Brass, Christine Klassen and Joli Kappes, the three physicians placed in this poverty-bound delta town by the Federal National Service Corps, will complete a two-year tour of duty and will leave to continue their medical training.

Next January, Dr. Howard J. Hoody, a family physician from Sioux Falls, S.D., who was recruited by the three doctors, plans to join the corps and set up practice in Tchula's clinic.

For the intervening six months, however, the clinic has found no doctor.

None of 278 physicians being placed by the National Health Service Corps this year have chosen to work in Tchula. And officials of the corps have not assigned a doctor here, although they can do so in some circumstances.

Two candidates for the corps have visited the Tchula clinic, but if neither chooses to work there the clinic will be closed, says David E. Garrison, director of the clinic.

If the clinic is closed Tchula would lose some of its attraction for Dr. Hoody, who expects to be working there with another doctor. Moreover, the closing of the clinic, now the town's third largest industry, would have a severe economic effect on the area—even if the closing were only temporary.

The National Service Corps, which places doctors in areas with fewer than one doctor per 4,000 population, says there are 1,600 federally designated communities with the same or similar physician problems as Tchula.

To alleviate the problems towns such as Tchula face in attracting doctors, Congress is considering if it should require all American medical school graduates to serve in a community needing doctors in repayment for the substantial Federal subsidies that go to their education.

Others, especially physician groups, would rather let the corps handle the problem.

The corps gets its doctors, dentists, nurses and other health workers for the most part, by giving scholarships and loans to students in return for later service. These scholarship students must take assignments assigned a doctor here, although they can do so in some circumstances.

The program's director, Dr. George P. Tolbert, and its former director, Dr. Edward Martin, prefer the assignments to be voluntary.

To send doctors to places they would prefer not to be, they believe, estranges the doctor and the community and does not serve the long-range goal of the corps. According to Dr. Martin, that goal is to get doctors to stay permanently in the places to which they are assigned.

The voluntary system has worked well, Dr. Tolbert said. There are now 520 corpsmen in 340 mostly rural communities around the country, and 40 percent of those corpsmen are settling in them.

Tchula, however, has not been that lucky, and those who now use the clinic are waiting to see if they must again spend more money on transportation to distant doctors' offices than for health care.

Part of a Chronic Problem
The crisis in Tchula is a case history of the chronic problem of getting the country's best educated, highest paid professionals—doctors—to its poorest, least developed and most needy communities.

While organizations such as the National Health Service Corps have improved the general outlook for these communities, they have left unresolved the most intractable problems, as illustrated by Tchula.

Tchula, in west-central Holmes County, is a town whose population of 2,500 is 85 percent black and whose median family income is $3,089 a year, most of it earned from work on the cotton and soybean plantations that are the economic mainstay of the region.

The remnants of old Southern racism abound in Tchula. Physicians in other towns in Holmes County still keep separate black and white waiting rooms in violation of Federal law.

The public schools, which were burned down rather than desegregated, have been rebuilt, but they are 100 percent black. Whites attend private academies.

The average length of schooling in the community is 8.4 years—two years lower than the state average, which is below the national average.

Plantation families live for the most part in dilapidated shacks first inhabited by their slave ancestors. Two or three rooms furnished with wall-to-wall beds, bare light bulbs, outdoor plumbing.

Reminder of Slave Days
These families file into the Tchula clinic with slips from their plantation owners, authorizing medical care for a host of problems worse than those found in most inner-city populations.

One family, for example, came to the clinic with nausea and diarrhea.

It was discovered that the family's well and outhouse were near one another and a drought had caused wastes to seep into the water supply.

ing arrangement, and their failure to join the church.

"Many in the town, didn't want anything to do with the government," explained John Edgar Hays, a cotton farmer who is the community liaison between the clinic and the town Board of Aldermen, of which he is a member. "They thought it was socialized medicine."

In time, however, the townspeople got used to the doctor's ways. And the doctors lived. Mr. Garrison, set up a fee schedule and placed the clinic on a sound business footing. At first the doctors had refused to charge fees, a stance that prompted some difficulties.

The doctors hired and trained eight workers, who are among the highest paid in a town of low pay scales. They applied for and received grant money to expand the facilities and to recruit a dentist, Dr. Russell Kearney of nearby Yazoo City.

The clinic has also attracted a private, part-time optometrist, Dr. Allen Findley, who sees patients two days a week.

A new pharmacy opened next door to the clinic, which has created two more jobs and has, according to the mayor, Lester Lyons, brought the town an appreciable increase in sales tax revenue.

Dollar introduces Better Way Checking.

Now you can get the highest interest on savings and free checking, all under one roof.

And, if you receive Social Security, you can have your monthly checks deposited directly into your personal checking account. You won't have to worry about theft or wait in line on Social Security day to have your check cashed. At Dollar, we'll guarantee your deposit, even if your check is late. One last better way.

You'll never have to lose time again going from one bank to another to do your banking.

Because as well as paying the highest interest on your savings account, Dollar can now give you free personal checking with up to $1,000 in overdraft privileges with our Better Way Reserve.

And, at Dollar, free checking is really free. You don't have to keep a minimum balance in a Dollar Savings Account or in your Better Way Checking Account. You don't have to pay for checks. No matter how many you write. And there will be no service charge on your monthly statement.

Granted, a Dollar Personal Checking Account will only save you a few dollars a month. But it's money in your pocket rather than your present bank's.

Free checking and high interest savings accounts aren't the only things you'll get by transferring your bank accounts to Dollar.

Dollar's Better Way Reserve is available if you personally apply at the Bank. Once approved, whenever you need more money than the balance in your account, you simply write a check for the amount required. Dollar even provides life insurance on the unpaid balance at no extra cost.

You'll also get a free Dollar Card for easy identification when cashing checks at any Dollar Savings Bank office.

accounts to Dollar without any difficulty. If you complete and mail the coupon below, we'll do all the work involved. Free.

But do it soon. With all of these advantages, you can't afford not to.

This transfer form allows you to conveniently transfer money from your present bank to Dollar free of charge. Just fill it out, enclose your bankbook and mail it to us. We'll return your bankbook after the transfer is completed.

Rothman's... the great Discount Men's Store for Expensive Clothing!

Are You Type A or Type B?

Categorizing people is a risky business. But in our years of selling custom-quality brands of men's clothing at fabulous discounts, it's apparent that most Rothman customers fall into one of two groups.

Type A: top corporate executives, eminent professionals, U.N. notables, etc. These men insist on the finest, and can easily afford to buy them in the swankiest shops. But they enjoy a great bargain as well as the next fellow... and buying two $260 suits for almost the price of one is their idea of just plain, hard-nosed common sense.

Type B: men of more modest means who always dreamed of wearing outstanding clothing, but were frustrated by the prohibitive price tags... until they discovered Rothman's! For such men, paying $155 for a $260 suit is a dream come true.

Which type are you is your secret. But it's no secret that legions of men the world over enjoy Rothman's unique values. Special purchases of top-brand manufacturers' over-productions—plus our low mark-up policy—make our discounts the real thing. And we back them with huge selections in every wanted size and style.

Haldeman Writes That Nixon Never Had Problem Handling Liquor

MISSION, Kan., June 20 (UPI)—Although Richard M. Nixon enjoyed an occasional drink and often appeared to be drunk late at night, the former President never had a drinking problem, his White House chief of staff, H. R. Haldeman, says.

"In all the thousands of hours I spent with Richard Nixon during an association of more than 16 years, all over the world, under all conditions and circumstances and in times of great elation and deep depression, I never saw any indication of a so-called 'drinking problem,'" Mr. Haldeman writes in the second of a five-part series of newspaper articles to be published tomorrow. The series is being distributed by Universal Press Syndicate, based in a suburb of Kansas City.

Bob Woodward and Carl Bernstein the reporters, in their book "The Final Days," hinted that Mr. Nixon was drinking heavily just before his resignation.

Mr. Haldeman says his chief would have a couple of drinks before dinner sometimes, usually on weekends, and frequently had wine with his dinner.

"But he never appeared to me to have a problem handling liquor, or depending on it to function in his capacity as President," he says.

Mr. Haldeman, who resigned in 1973 and later was convicted in the Watergate cover-up, gives an example from the 1968 Presidential campaign when Mr. Nixon appeared to be drunk but had only had a half-bottle of beer.

Same Pattern Often

"I observed the same pattern often before and in subsequent years of our association," he says. "When Nixon was tired and unwinding, he often had a bottle of beer before going to bed. Sometimes he took a sleeping pill, especially if he had a lot on his mind and was tense. This combination of exhaustion and beer tended to produce the groggy look and the slurred talk one usually associates with intoxication."

Mr. Haldeman says he urged Mr. Nixon to issue the pardons for Watergate defendants and draft evaders in a telephone conversation Aug. 7, 1974, one day before the President announced to the nation that he was leaving the White House because of Watergate. He says Mr. Nixon called him in Newport Beach, Calif., to tell him he had decided to resign.

"If you're going to leave office," I told Nixon, "you should take all the traumas of Watergate and Vietnam with you. President Ford would then have a chance to start with a clean slate. With the horrors behind him."

He says Mr. Nixon replied, "I'll give it some thought. I appreciate your recommendation, Bob."

Mr. Haldeman says the President's new chief of staff, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., told him to put it in writing, and he outlined his pardon proposal in a memorandum to Mr. Nixon, who received it just before he went on television Aug. 9, 1974, to announce his resignation.

"Although I was informed that my [written] arguments reached the President and that

how the report of the House Intelligence Committee was disclosed and allegations of conflicts of interest against Representative Robert

L. F. Sikes, Democrat of Florida.
Then there have been newspaper accounts that some representatives received Federal travel pay to which they were not entitled. There was the arrest of Representative Allan T.
Howe, Democrat of Utah, who was charged in Salt Lake City with soliciting a policewoman posing as a prostitute. And it was disclosed that Representative Joe D. Waggoner Jr., Democrat of Louisiana, was detained, but released, by the police in Washington last

January after allegedly soliciting a policewoman.
Washington police officials say it has been their policy for a century not to arrest members of Congress on misdemeanor charges because of constitutional guarantees of immunity from arrest while attending sessions of Congress. Police Chief Maurice J. Cullinane said that even that policy "must be reviewed" in light of the incident involving Mr. Howe in Utah.
The cumulative effect of these allegations could be devastating for members of Congress seeking re-election in districts where the vote was close last the last time, even though the vast majority of the representatives have been untouched by the allegations.

"I don't believe the abuses are widespread, but what we see in the paper every day implies that everybody is doing it," said Representative Toby Moffett, Democrat of Connecticut, who joined his freshman colleagues in urging reforms.
Since most of the adverse publicity has focused on Democrats, the House Republican leaders have chided the Democrats for not supporting them in various reform attempts in past years. But there has been no open chortling among the minority because, as one Republican put it, "the bad publicity reflects on everyone, and who knows what will be in tomorrow's newspaper."

"The Republicans can't make it unilaterally if we are to rehabilitate respect for the institution," said Representative
John B. Anderson of Illinois, chairman of the House Republican Conference.
"Can't Do It Alone"
Over the years, the House and Senate have been reluctant to discipline their members.
Under the Constitution each house is the judge of the election and qualifications of its members and has the power to punish them for "disorderly behavior."

But such punishment has been rare and has occurred in recent years largely when a member has been contemptuous of the institution or an embarrassment to it. The charges against Senator Joseph R. Mc-Carthy, Republican of Wisconsin, in 1954 and Mr. Dodd in 1967 and the exclusion of Mr.
Powell involved in part allegations that they had showed arrogance toward investigating committees.
Only seven Senators and 18
Representatives have been censured since 1875, and two of those Senators and 10 of those

Representatives were re-elected after their censures.
A study of Congressional ethics in 1970 by a committee of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York attributed the reluctance of Congress to police its members to institutional loyalty, or a "club spirit," and the members' belief that the electoral process should be the only discipline.
The study quoted the testimony in 1951 of Senator J. W.
Fulbright, the Arkansas Democrat, who said:
"I see this in the press very often: 'Why does not the Congress clean its own house? Why do they not discipline their own members? Why do they not do so-and-so?"

"I simply do not agree that it is the proper function of Congress. I think it is extremely difficult to make people from diverse parts of the country get along in some harmony. If we undertake to discipline our own members and that sort of thing, we will really bog down in recrimination and not accomplish anything. The greater purpose of making the Government function far outweighs these individual delinquencies."

FOR SAVINGS

On weekends fly to Washington for less capital.

Save more than 35% on Eastern's weekend Air-Shuttle® service.
This weekend, shuttle down to D.C. for a little sight-seeing. You can pop-in on a friend at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. Race to the top of the Washington Monument. Or take a stroll through history at the Smithsonian Institute. All this for as little as $46 round-trip any weekend through August 15th. And for your little ones, the fare is even less. Children 2 to 12 fly round-trip for just $31. At these prices you don't have to wait for a special occasion just to visit friends and relatives.
All you have to do is catch an outgoing Air-Shuttle flight at 8 pm or later on Friday, and catch a return flight as late as 9 pm on Sunday, the same weekend. On weekends an Air-Shuttle flight leaves LaGuardia almost every hour on the hour to Washington from 8 am to 9 pm. You don't even need a reservation. Just show up. The same $46 is also good on one of our scheduled flights from Newark that require reservations.
For more information about Eastern's weekend excursion fares to both Washington and Boston call your travel agent, or Eastern at 986-5000 in New York, or 621-2121 in Newark.

Diversity in Politics A Baptist Trademark

By KENNETH A. BRIGGS

NORFOLK, Va., June 18 — A group of Southern Baptists here for their church's annual meeting were talking gleefully the other day around a luncheon table about possibly being able to invite a President Jimmy Carter to speak to next year's gathering. "You mean President Reagan," injected another Southern Baptist from an adjacent table.

Value System Cited. Above all, Southern Baptists tend to bridle at the thought that they would vote for Mr. Carter just because he is one of them and a Southerner. They are far more concerned that the candidate represent a value system consistent with the Biblical commandments, they say.

Autobiography Selling. Sales of the book were reported brisk at the convention. The publisher brought 1,400 copies, including Bantam Paperback, the largest number of any title, including the Bible. Several hundred were grabbed up in the first two days.

Jimmy Carter after attending church in Plains, Ga., with his wife, Rosalynn, and children, Amy and Chip.

Washington sex scandals and perceived national moral lapse, the same message is being heard with increased fervor among many conservative Christian groups. There appears to be more effort to elect candidates acceptable on spiritual ground this year than at any time in the recent past.

Increased attention is being paid to evangelizing among nonwhites and nonaffluent groups. Significantly, Mr. Carter's conversion experience in 1968 occurred while he was in Springfield, Mass., working with a Hispanic pastor in a poor neighborhood.

ST. PAUL, June 18 — When Republican politicians meet here to compare battle reports on President Ford's and Ronald Reagan's struggle, delegates, they end up discussing on Robert Barry's state of mind. It is not that there is anything enigmatic or capricious about Mr. Barry, a manager for a company called Multi-Clean, which produces cleaning products.

Robert Barry

Emotionally Uncommitted. Mr. Barry is the fourth and the only one of those delegates who appears to be emotionally and technically uncommitted and may stay that way until he gets to Kansas City. By then, he may have been courted personally by the two candidates. Mrs. Leier is hoping to introduce him to Mr. Reagan next weekend, and President Ford has been phoning uncommitted delegates from the White House.

In fact, as he patiently explains when he is asked, Mr. Barry has strong leanings to Mr. Ford and to Mr. Reagan. He believes that he is guilty of no inconsistency in subscribing to each of the following propositions: Mr. Ford has been a good and effective president, especially in his management of the economy.

Brown Buys Time on TV For Campaign Postscript

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON

LOS ANGELES, June 20 — Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. of California has bought a half-hour of television network time next Friday night to put a personal postscript on his 1976 Presidential campaign. Campaign: The taped and edited discourse, for which the 38-year-old Governor is paying NBC $80,188, will be part sermon, part celebration, part thank-you but mainly see-you-later, according to the men around him.

Amazed in New York. The "undercurrent" of his television message, one Brown adviser said today, will be that "government is frequently doing the wrong things, asking the wrong questions, attacking the wrong problems" — a suspicion that Governor Brown's visit to New York confirmed for him last week.

Gratitude for these inadvertent benefits, in addition to the handwoven support for him that could emerge, may turn into many votes for Mr. Carter in November. As the country's population shifts to the so-called Sunbelt states in the nation's Southern tier, making that region more influential, the importance of the region's most vigorous Protestant group grows accordingly.

to insure the kind of placid convention for which the party has yearned after 1968 and 1972.

By the closest possible margin, the committee voted to instruct the party's Commission on Presidential Primaries to ramp the delegate selection system so that primary states cannot award to a candidate with a plurality of votes at any level all the delegates from that level.

The move is designed to establish full proportional representation among competing delegates in primary states. At present, a number of states give all delegates from a Congressional district to the candidate who carries it; thus, a man who failed to carry any district but got 45 percent of the state vote would get no delegates. This would go against the intention of the Democratic convention of 1977 that "winner-take-all" primaries be abolished.

The resolution to refer the issue to the commission with a mandate to eliminate this practice was approved 58 1/2 to 37 1/2, which former Representative Martha Griffiths, the committee chairman, called "the closest vote in American history."

The primary commission, headed by Morley Winograd, the Democratic chairman from Michigan, was set up by Robert S. Strauss, the national chairman, to make recommendations to improve the Presidential selection system. The Rules Committee referred a number of issues to it today.

Gov. Cecil Underwood, the party's nominee this year for his old office, who in past political struggles, such as the 1968 Republican Presidential contest, almost always took the opposite position from Governor Moore's.

Pressure Is Reported

"I think we'll have more than eight at the convention in Kansas City," Miss Herndon said, "but there is a lot of pressure from the Governor, and Ronald Reagan doesn't have that much leverage."

Allocating the delegates on the basis of the Gazette survey, which appears to be the most dispassionate reckoning available, the President now has 1,021 delegate votes, only 109 short of nomination. Mr. Reagan has 943, and 138 remain uncommitted in The New York Times's tabulation.

The West Virginia developments took some of the sting out of the weekend's state convention results for Mr. Ford. Although he won in Iowa, where he gained 19 votes to Mr. Reagan's 17 and took 13 of 17 delegates in Delaware, with the four others uncommitted because of activity in Colorado, Texas and Washington.

The results in those three states, all of which completed their balloting late yesterday, were as follows:

In Colorado, Mr. Reagan swept the three delegates elector in the Second Congressional District. He now has six more delegates than Mr. Ford.

Next weekend, three state conventions will be held, two of them on territory favorable to Mr. Reagan. He is expected to win all or nearly all of Montana's 20 delegates and New Mexico's 21. The President is favored in Minnesota, which selects 18 at-large delegates to complete a delegation that is currently divided, 15 votes for Mr. Ford, five for Mr. Reagan and four uncommitted.

However, John P. Sears, the former actor's national campaign director, said last night in Des Moines that Mr. Reagan hoped to spring a surprise in Minnesota by taking a third or more of the state's at-large delegates.

Uncommitted Jersey Slate Declines to Endorse Ford

EAST BRUNSWICK, N.J., June 20 (UPI)—New Jersey's delegation to the Republican National Convention, although overwhelmingly favoring President Ford, rejected today a move to shed its nominally uncommitted status and endorse Mr. Ford officially.

Each member of the 67-member delegation was part of a slate elected June 8 and committed, at least in principle, to supporting Mr. Ford over former Gov. Ronald Reagan of California. But some say they are genuinely uncommitted.

The delegates and alternates agreed to meet again in July after the Democratic National Convention to discuss the possibility of endorsing Mr. Ford. Senator Clifford P. Case, was chosen to head the delegation.

Bridge: 'Feel' Can Motivate Double When Bids Reach High Level

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

When a competitive auction ends at a high level, a player will very often double on "feel": his judgment tells him that the declarer is slated to have some trouble. East had several reasons for doubling on the diagrammed deal played recently at New York's Cavendish Club, and he was almost, but not quite, right. On the face of it, the defenders had enough tricks to defeat the contract, but the declarer played skillfully and caused one of them to disappear.

Playing Chicago, or four-deal bridge, South opened with one heart and heard his partner raise to game after an overcall of one spade. East tried four spades, hoping his partner's spade suit would be strong.

North looks for penalty. North had mentally raised his chopper, looking forward to a big penalty, but South bid five diamonds, which was corrected to five hearts. East thought he could probably defeat five hearts, since he had some defense strength in the minor suits and the trumps were to break badly. East certainly did not want to hear five spades from his partner, so he doubled.

It might seem that the declarer was doomed to lose one spade trick, one heart trick and one club trick, and this would have been the case if West had led a club. But naturally West led the spade king, and shifted to a club. The defense was now much harder.

Diamond Ace Cashed
The declarer was Herb Lavine of New York, an expert who confines himself largely to rubber bridge these days. He won the club shift, cashed the diamond ace and began a cross-ruff in diamonds and spades. If West had ruffed with the heart

MEDICARE PREMIUM TO RISE 50¢ A MONTH

WASHINGTON, June 20 (AP)—About 24.6 million elderly and disabled Americans will begin paying 50 cents more a month beginning July 1 for Medicare insurance covering doctors' bills and other out-of-hospital medical care.

The premium increase is the first in two years, because of a legislative quirk, and is still a bargain, according to the Social Security Administration. If there had not been an 8 percent limit on the increase, from $6.70 to $7.20 a month, so-called Medicare Part B premiums would have risen to $10.70 a month to keep pace with rising medical costs, a spokesman said.

The increase will put Medicare's supplementary medical insurance program on a sounder financial footing next year. The program had a total income of $4.9 billion in the fiscal year ending July 1, including $1.9 billion from premiums and the rest from the treasury and trust fund interest and total expenditures of $5.3 billion.

In the fiscal year 1977, beginning Oct. 1, the Government said it expected total income of $7.3 billion including $2.2 billion from premiums, and total expenditures of $6.5 billion. Benefit payments were $4.7 billion in the fiscal year 1976 and are estimated at $5.9 billion for the fiscal year 1977.

New Golden Op Sail Assertions On Profit to City Are Disputed

By MAURICE CARROLL

One Operation Sail concessionaire has agreed to cut back a special high parking rate and another will be asked to share some of its income with New York City, Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin said yesterday.

Both assertions were instantly disputed. Mr. Goldin said that a special $5 parking rate at the Battery Park City garage had been cut by the Department of Consumer Affairs to the "established" rate, which he said was $3.60.

Decision Not Made
The Consumer Affairs Commissioner Elinor Guggenheimer replied that she had made no decision so far about the higher rate. Perhaps, she said, the surcharge will be allowed, with the extra money used as a donation to the nonprofit group running Operation Sail. Any way, she said, the regular garage rate actually is $3.50 and whatever she decides "has nothing to do with Mr. Goldin."

Mr. Goldin also said that the city would seek a share of what he said was a $25 fee that the Circle Line was planning for observation rides through the floodplains of sailing ships and naval vessels that will crowd the waters around the city for the celebration of the nation's Bicentennial.

An officer of the Circle Line reacted with surprise. "He's a little off base," said Frank Clair, the line's treasurer. "We operate as a city concession." Mr. Clair said that the line paid rent for its pier at West 43d Street and that was all. Besides, he said, there were two cruises—one for $25 and one for $35.

It was all very complicated and there were some hints that the feud between Mr. Goldin and Mayor Beame might be renewing itself in anticipation of the municipal election next year.

On Saturday, Mr. Goldin issued an audit report that said concessionaires would make "hundreds of thousands" of dollars in profits while the financially beleaguered city would have to spend $1.4 million on extra services in connection with Operation Sail.

Yesterday, he issued a statement saying that, "as a consequence" of his report, some changes had been made. "I have now been assured by the Department of Consumer Affairs," he said, "that Restaurant Associates will not be allowed to boost the July 4th parking price at the Battery Park City garage above the established rate for the day, which is $3.60."

He said that the announced $5 charge, with Restaurant Associates getting the difference, had been rescinded. "My office has also been informed by the Department of Parks and Recreation that negotiations will be held with the Circle Line," he said. The line is offering $25-per-ticket cruises on six or seven of the boats that usually circle Manhattan and a $35 cruise on a bigger Hudson River Day Liner, according to Mr. Clair.

Fighters in Ranks of Labor

By DAMON STETSON

THE BROTHERS REUTHER and the Story of the U.A.W. By Victor G. Reuther. 523 pages. Houghton Mifflin Company, $16.95.

At the 1947 convention of the United Automobile Workers in Atlantic City, Walter P. Reuther overwhelmed his opposition and consolidated his position as head of the big union. The next day, in his rare moment of joy, he introduced to the convention Valentine and Anna Reuther, his father and mother, who were on the stage with him.

"A good pal of mine," he said of his father. "An old fighter in the ranks of labor, a trade unionist from way back when the going was rough, who indoctrinated his boys when they were pretty young and told them the most important thing in the world to fight for was the other guy, the brotherhood of man, the golden rule."

There was a standing ovation from the floor and then Walter asked his father to say a few words. The German immigrant and former brewery worker arose and, with the sincerity of a proud father, said, "I am extremely happy that the seed I tried to sow in the minds of our children is bearing fruit, and that they are engaged in the trade-union movement that has always been dear to my heart."

Days in U.S.S.R. Recalled

Walter Reuther went on from that poignant moment to lead the auto union in trail-blazing achievements in collective bargaining — pensions, productivity and cost-of-living wage increases, and supplemental unemployment benefits to help absorb the shocks of the auto industry's economic fluctuations. As a national and international labor figure he was a dynamic and articulate leader ever willing to advise a President on foreign policy, to tell the auto industry how it could convert to airplane production in World War II, or to attempt to prod George Meany to expand the organizing efforts of the American Federation of Labor and the Congress of Industrial Organizations.

Walter was the best known of the three Reuther brothers who devoted their lives to the labor movement — a fourth, Theodore, lived in West Virginia and worked for a steel corporation. But Victor and Roy played active roles in the progressive trade unionism of the C.I.O. and the U.A.W. — Victor in the international sphere in later years, and Roy in politics.

In this detailed and well-documented book, the youngest brother, Victor, and the only one of the three "labor union" brothers still living, tells the story of the Reuther years from the Sunday afternoon debates, with each boy assigned a topic, in their Wheeling, W. Va., home to that night in May 1970 when Walter and his wife, May, were killed in a tragic plane crash at Pellston, Mich.

In between, Victor tells of the trip he and Walter took to Europe and Russia as young men, how they worked for 18 months in a Soviet auto plant in Gorky, how Walter fell in love with a Russian girl, and how they returned to Detroit and subsequently participated in the great organizing battles and sit-ins in the auto industry, fought Communist influences in the union and underworld interference from the outside, were nearly killed by would-be assassins, and finally shared in the pioneering collective-bargaining triumphs of the 50's and 60's.

Co-Authorship Planned

In Victor's opinion, the merger of the A.F.L. and the C.I.O. in 1955, worked out by Walter and Mr. Meany, was premature and "more or less a shotgun wedding." He is unrelenting in his criticism of Mr. Meany's leadership of the merged movement, a view shared by Walter when he took the U.A.W. out of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in July 1966 on grounds that it had become a "complacent custodian of the status quo" and had refused to go along with new ideas and concepts to meet the challenges of the times. Victor is particularly appalled by the posture of the A.F.L.-C.I.O. in foreign affairs, contending that it became literally a disbursement agent for the State Department and that the A.F.L.-C.I.O. international affairs departments had been involved with the C.I.A. — a charge denied by Mr. Meany.

Victor and Walter had planned to write this book together, but it has emerged, because of Walter's death, as Victor's book and the views and judgments are clearly his. The narrative profits from his insights, the closeness of the relationship among the three brothers, and the documentation — much of it now on record in the Wayne University Archives in Detroit. Frequently, in reading this chronicle of great labor events and an exceptional family one could wish for and expect a more intimate and personal disclosure of what Walter was thinking and saying in his nonrecorded moments. But Victor Reuther has produced an important addition to the history of the labor movement and the Reuther legend.

Normalizing Relations With China

By Allen S. Whiting

ANN ARBOR, Mich.—The first Sino-Indian exchange of ambassadors since the 1962 border war proves Peking's willingness to mend diplomatic fences despite domestic political turmoil. On Oct. 22, 1975, an incident on the disputed Himalayan frontier resulted in two Indian dead. However, the subsequent death of Premier Chou En-lai and the topping of his funeral successor, the then Vice Premier, Teng Hsiao-ping, did not prevent New Delhi from improving relations with its northern neighbor.

This should encourage President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger to negotiate the complete normalization of relations with China before the death of Chairman Mao Tse-tung further complicates the political scene in Peking.

The failure to establish full diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China is damaging Sino-American détente. Considerable evidence exists that the pace of normalization has fallen far short of what Peking had anticipated.

In 1975, intimations of Chinese in-travel and economic relationships unimpaired.

Were such a precedent to be followed by the United States, our official expression of interest in Taiwan's peaceful evolution would be significantly reinforced by the tangible presence of many American citizens and considerable United States capital on the island.

Any violation by Peking of a tacit understanding not to attack Taiwan would challenge important interests, whose influence in and on Congress could not be discounted in advance. In addition, because of Tokyo's concern over sizable Japanese interests there, joint consultation would undoubtedly produce an appropriate response to signs of an imminent effort by China to take the island by force.

To minimize the likelihood of this eventually occurring, however, our position must be made sufficiently clear and China's tacit acquiescence sufficiently credible to provide the necessary assurance that Taiwan will not be attacked in the aftermath of American military disengagement.

Two underlying imperatives currently render the normalization of Sino-American relations urgent. First, so long as we remain politically and militarily involved with the Chinese Nationalists, good relations with Peking will be vulnerable to political opposition in China on an issue that strikes at the most sensitive nerves of Chinese self-consciousness. Not only will our bilateral relations be affected, but also our interaction in other areas such as Korea.

Second, the Peking-Moscow-Washington triangular relationship is significantly involved. After the death of Mr. Mao, the present intense hostility between China and the Soviet Union may well diminish. If we have failed to complete normalization and remain tied to Taiwan's defense, Sino-Soviet rapprochement may come sooner and go further than it otherwise would.

Our competitive position with Moscow would suffer because Peking must certainly come to judge our intervention in its internal affairs as more serious than its grievances with Moscow.

Indeed, if normalization has not occurred before an improvement in Sino-Soviet relations, it may be more difficult for the United States to elicit tacit acceptance of the desired formulations concerning the necessity for peaceful resolution of the Taiwan problem.

Allen S. Whiting, consultant on China affairs to Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger between 1969 and 1973, is professor of political science at the University of Michigan.

The Last Republican

By William V. Shannon

WASHINGTON, June 20—The prolonged competition between President Ford and former Governor Reagan has the quality of a death struggle.

Since there are hardly any serious philosophical differences between them, it is difficult at first glance to understand why their respective candidacies arouse such destructive antagonisms. Surely it cannot be simply a desire to replace an amiable, rather dull incumbent with a more polished and effective campaigner?

To understand the intensity of this contest, one has to look beyond the candidates to the respective factions for which they are as much figureheads as leaders.

President Ford has the backing of the experienced, worldly-wise Republicans of the Northeast and the industrial Middle West. The businessmen in these regions have for a long time been coming to terms with the power of big government and big labor and the rise of blacks and other minorities. Their most skillful politicians—Nelson Rockefeller, Clifford Case, Charles Mathias, Charles Percy—have learned to breast the tides of liberalism.

The raw, newly rich Republicanism of the South, the Southwest and the Far West condemns the power of the Federal Government, would smash the labor unions if it could, and remains reluctant to share any real power with the racial minorities. Rather than admiring Rockefeller-Percy Republicanism as a triumph of adaptation and survival, Sunbelt Republicans view it as a species of betrayal.

How can the Republican conventional wisdom of Houston and Phoenix seem like fantasy in Pittsburgh and Detroit?

One reason is that steel, coal, automobiles and other Northern industries are labor-intensive while the oil and petrochemicals of the Southwest are not. Other industries such as textiles moved south precisely to escape unions. Thus, Northern businessmen routinely take account of unionized labor relations and union-backed politicians while their counterparts in the South and Southwest do not.

Another factor is old versus new wealth. Many Reagan backers made their fortunes in the last thirty years out of the fantastic growth of Texas, Arizona and California. They are land speculators, housing contractors, shopping center developers and fast-food franchisers. Although a disinterested observer might think that much of their wealth was merely the social increment produced by any rapidly growing population, the newly rich naturally perceive it as the result of their own hard work and moral virtue.

When a region is so visibly growing rich, the many who share only modestly in the affluence are nevertheless encouraged to hope that they, too, may do as well. Consequently, when Mr. Reagan invokes the virtues of individualism and self-reliance, he wins many ordinary people in the Sunbelt.

These values also persist among all classes in the older regions. But they are necessarily somewhat diluted among Eastern Republicans who are the third- or fourth-generation rich. Such people cannot quite fancy themselves as dashing, self-made individualists as do the up-from-the-cotton-farm entrepreneurs of Texas and California. Self-reliance is all very well, but Grandfather's trust fund is a comfort, too.

The Reaganite appeal rings truer in the North among aspiring ethnic Americans such as those who elected Senator James Buckley in New York. But the predominantly Catholic and Jewish cultural ethos of the Northern cities is less conducive to Reaganite conservatism than is Southern Protestantism.

President Ford, who has willingly subscribed to every article in the Reaganites' credo, remains perplexed by his failure to assuage their ideological passion. Aside from the deficiencies of his political style, Mr. Ford suffers from two fundamental errors that he made in his first month in office.

The first was the Nixon pardon, which squandered the good will of many independent voters. His second error was to choose Mr. Rockefeller as his Vice President without adopting a "New York strategy."

Mr. Rockefeller is the object of obsessive hatred among party conservatives. Selecting him made sense only if President Ford was prepared to follow the Rockefeller approach—an expansionist economic policy, an alliance with the construction unions, a courtship of blacks, some help for the aging cities, and a generally innovative style on every big problem from health care to energy.

Such a strategy offered the President a fighting chance that he might carry the Northeast and the Middle West as Mr. Rockefeller four times carried New York. He would then have the one argument that would overpower his opponents: that he can be elected and his opponent cannot.

As it is, Mr. Reagan grows in strength each day because it is increasingly evident that he is the stronger candidate against Mr. Carter in the South and Far West, while the President cannot guarantee victory in the East or the Middle West.

Destroyed by ideological and cultural antagonisms that are ravaging his party and that he barely comprehends, Gerald Ford passes into history as a part-term President, his destiny that of the Whig Millard Fillmore. He is the last of his line.

What to Call a Lawyer

By Robert N. Shumansky

COLUMBUS, Ohio—The word may not have reached Cambridge, Mass., yet, but there can be no doubt that "lawyers" are on the way out. The evidence is irrefutable.

For instance, in Columbus, Ohio, the quintessential American city, the place where Fructer & Gamble of Cincinnati sends new products to be test-marketed, the Yellow Pages listing for "Lawyers" is followed with a terse "See Attorneys, Patent Attorneys," and "Lawyers' Reference Service" with "See Attorney Referral Service." Clearly, those who go shopping with their fingers through the Yellow Pages can't even find a "lawyer."

This listing is obviously the opposite of "Ecclesiastical Equipment & Supplies" thoughtfully being followed by "See Church Supplies (Page 222)," and "Religious Goods (Page 737)." "Attorneys" recommends itself, over the shorter "Lawyers" to the Yellow Pages compiler, who must assume that the public primarily thinks of an "attorney" rather than a "lawyer" as someone who provides legal services.

Nor is the Yellow Pages intellect unique. During a dinner table conversation about this important matter, one of today's modern young women—wife, mother, second-year student at Ohio State University's College of Law—unhesitatingly said that she much preferred to be known as an "attorney" rather than as a "lawyer." When asked why, she said, "Attorney sounds better than lawyer." She was not in the least fazed by the comment that it seemed more logical to be a "lawyer" if one went to a "law school" to study "law" and thereafter practiced "law," and not to an "attorney school" to study "attorneying" to practice "attorneying."

There are even stronger signs that "lawyer" is virtually obsolete—certainly declining—in the real America. The innovations of the American black community are being recognized and copied by the community at large, and it is significant that The Columbus Call and Post, the newspaper voice of the black community, always refers to "Attorney John Doe" as it does to his physician wife as "Dr. Jane Doe." Thus, the handwriting is clearly on the wall.

Harvard Law School, this country's first, is waging the good fight for "lawyer," but it is in wild disarray on the matter of appending "Esq." to the names of women lawyers. "Esq." is the abbreviated form of "Esquire," which is derived from a word for "shield-bearer" or "squire" and thus unmistakably masculine and has been used by "The Law School" since time immemorial as a title of courtesy in writing to male lawyers. To right-thinking respecters of purity of language, it can't be added to the names of female lawyers.

Harvard first admitted women to its regular classes in the fall of 1950, so the overwhelming majority of its 21,592 degree holders are men, but some of its women graduates are now requesting that their letters be addressed to "Jane Doe, Esq." Among some young lawyers in Columbus, letters go out to "Jane Doe, Esquire," which really demonstrates courtesy. It is comforting to know that our living language will soon produce the ultimate: "Attorney Jane Smith, Esquire," with nary a mention of "lawyer" anywhere.

However, there is a simple solution available: In 1969, Harvard Law School, succumbing to pressures generated by such places as the Law School of Capital University inlexley, Ohio, started granting the degree of Doctor of Laws (Juris Doctor or J.D.) instead of Bachelor of Laws (LL.B.) to its graduates.

All of the problems—lawyer, attorney, counselor, Esq., Esquire, male, female, can be solved by making the approximately 350,000 persons licensed to practice law in this country into "Doctors" based on Juris Doctor.

Thus, by one simple act of the imagination, this country will have solved forever its "doctor" shortage, while at the same time the legal profession will be unfailingly courteous to itself.

Robert N. Shumansky is a lawyer that is to say, an attorney . . . er, umm . . . a counsel . . . oh, uh . . .

"No, I haven't found the Brophy correspondence, Mr. Steedman, but what I have found are six dynamite letters from a certain Bubbles LaRue which I think would be of interest to the IRS and your wife."

Spens Up New Interest in Time Capsules

By BEN FRANKLIN

SEWARD, Neb.—When the late Frank Lloyd Wright, the architect and critic, pondered what would remain of 20th century civilization in the event of a nuclear holocaust, he concluded that the identifiable artifacts most likely to be excavated in largest numbers from our ruins would be the vitreous China toilet bowl.

Structures—steel and concrete—would be vaporized, but "the plumbing would remain," Wright exclaimed sardonically to a biographer.

But Wright was not counting on the Bicentennial time capsule craze which has swept the country this year. Because of people like Harold Keith Davison, other amusing mysteries of our culture also may decorate "future archeologists' digs." It is not their living rooms—like a 1975 Chevrolet dug up like a dinosaur, from the Nebraska loan.

Caught Up in the Rage Mr. Davison, who runs a discount hardware emporium here ("everything for the farmer but rain"), got caught up with thousands of other Americans—only more so—in the Bicentennial time capsule rage. He decided to bury a car.

On last July 4, with a hired crane, Mr. Davison, 68 years old, lowered into what a sign here proclaims as "the world's largest time capsule" an entire, new 1975 Chevrolet Vega coupe—yellow, with radio and heater—bought and paid for by him for posterity.

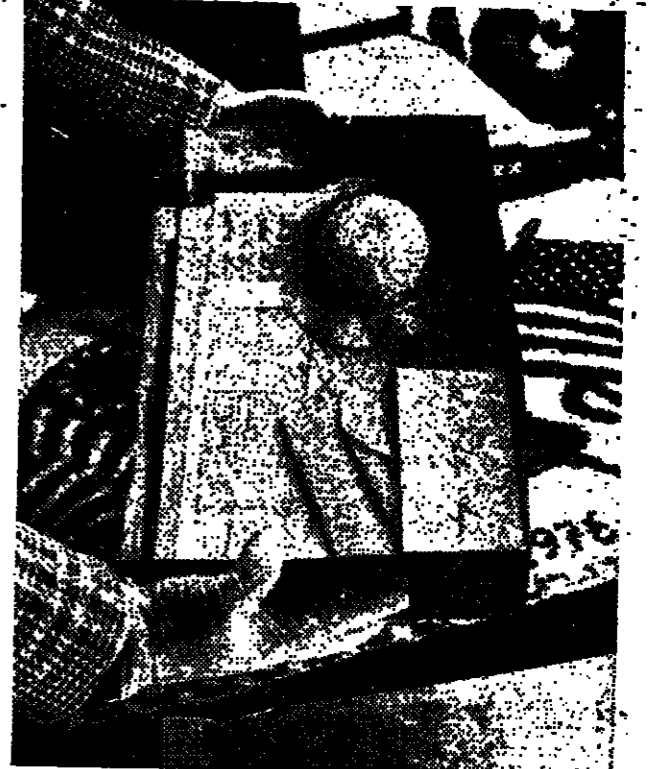

The Chevy, the 6-by-8-by-20-foot reinforced concrete vault that contains it, the enormous excavation in his front yard required to receive the 50 cubic yards of concrete and tons of steel reinforcement rods, the public ceremony last July 4 at which Gov. and Mrs. J. James Exon were persuaded to christen the crypt with champagne, and the Davison-designed concrete sculpture that now stands atop the capsule site—all that cost Mr. Davison about $15,000, he says. Another—and he says the final—sealing is planned for this July 4 when Mr. Davison is to enter, through a hatch installed for such historical postscripts, a blue Kawasaki motorcycle.

The explanation for that is not only that it carries out the vehicular theme, but also that Kawasakis are built here, from Japanese parts, at the company's main United States assembly plant. Hopes for a Refill Mr. Davison chose a 50-year time span for his capsule with the idea that "the children and students, at least, who put things in now will still be around in 2025 to see them taken out." He hopes the capsule will then be refilled and resealed for another 50-year sleep. The encapsulated items here include a Teflon frying pan, a bolt of polyester fabric with a zipper and a pattern, a pair of bikini

's Relations With Reporters Are Characterized Impromptu, the Opposite of Usual Managed News

BY CAROL M. COOPER
One of the regularly covered figures in Albany, Mr. Carey tells with a wry smile in a call to David Burke, Governor Carey's closest adviser, that Mr. Carey's voice came from the top of the Capitol building. "He did it," he says. "He evokes a certain

Why, among reporters and members of the Governor's staff, who have become accustomed to keeping a wary eye on the newsworthy bombshells that Governor Carey is apt to drop during informal chats with individual reporters. These can occur anywhere—along the legislative corridors, in the Governor's airplane or while crossing the street to the state buildings across from the Capitol. There, was, even the time when the first reporter through a revolving door after the Governor got an answer to his question and made page one news the next day. To the dismay of his colleagues who had not overheard the conversation. Veteran observers of relations between past Governors and legislative correspondents point out that Mr. Carey's willingness to be buttonholed by reporters makes him one of the most accessible of recent Governors. One reporter called it the opposite of "managed news"—the more common situation, where the public figure issues his information by press release, elaborates on it only through spokesmen and never faces cameras or reporters except in the controlled atmosphere of a formal news conference. "From a good government point of view, it's great," says David Shaffer, Associated Press correspondent in the Capitol. "But it certainly creates a lot of confusion."

Problem Defined One of the problems for the legislative correspondents here—most of the major newspapers in the state, as well as the two wire services and a number of smaller papers—have bureaus in the Capitol—is that the Governor's press office has often been ignorant of his informal statements. When reporters then call the press office for details about just what the Governor said and just what he meant, the press spokesmen have simply been unable to answer the questions. Much of this stems from Governor Carey's own personality and his method of work. He is described by many who know him as a "loner" who tends to work principally with a few chosen advisers and who shares his thinking with relatively few people. "He is not overly self-conscious about the press," says one person who has worked with him. "In the general course of business, he thinks this is a businesslike govern-

The Major Events of the Day

International
With Palestinian guerrillas and Lebanese leftist irregulars providing security, the United States Navy carried out an unhurried evacuation yesterday of 263 Americans and other foreign nationals from Beirut under orders from President Ford. A landing craft took the evacuees to another Navy vessel that waited three miles off the coast. It seemed that fewer than one-tenth of the 1,800 Americans believed to have been in Beirut were making the 40-hour voyage to Athens. Others said they hoped to go by road to Damascus since they were not permitted to take their cars and large amounts of luggage aboard the Navy ship. And other people chose not to make the sea trip because of a ban on large pets and the prospect of animal quarantines in Greece. [Page 1, Column 8.]

Mahmoud Riad, Secretary General of the Arab League, said at a news conference in Damascus that he expected the first contingent of an Arab peacekeeping force to enter Lebanon "by land and air" this week. He said that the initial unit would consist of about 1,000 men from several unspecified nations and that they would take over Beirut's airport, which has been closed. [15:1.]

South Africans of all races went to church to pray for racial peace and the Government offered its first hint that it might reassess its policies toward the country's 18 million blacks. The weather was bitterly cold, but the churches were filled. The police estimated that in three days of rioting in black townships last week 108 people were killed and 1,100 injured. [17:1.]

Millions of Italians began voting in a crucial election that could give the Communist Party a role in the national government for the first time. Because of the possibility that the Communists may get cabinet seats, the election is being watched closely by officials in Western Europe and Washington. The voting will continue today, when the results will be announced. [3:1-3.]

National
President Ford appears to be the principal beneficiary in the breakup of the second largest bloc of uncommitted delegates to the Republican National Convention—the one in West Virginia. Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr., a Ford supporter, met with the President at

The White House and said afterward that Mr. Ford was assured of 20 West Virginia votes, but he may have made an overstatement. [1:1.]

The Democratic Rules Committee, which has been preparing recommended changes in rules for conventions after this year's in New York City, has refused to guarantee women an equal share of the convention seats. Instead, the committee approved a resolution requiring that the party conventions in 1980 and after "shall promote an equal division" between male and female delegates. This is not quite what the women's caucus had sought. The committee unanimously approved a plan that would make it possible for more women, blacks and young people to be delegates but without reinstating quotas. [1:2-3.]

With all 435 House seats and one-third of the Senate up for election this year, Congress is especially sensitive to public criticism, possibly because of the bad publicity some of its members recently have had, and is undergoing a critical self-examination. Some reforms may ensue. House members call news conferences almost daily to propose changes in the way Congress spends and accounts for the more than $800 million it spends annually, allocates its perquisites, or deals with the thousands of Congressional employees. [1:4.]

Metropolitan
The New York City school system is nearing the end of six academic years of great trauma, battered by the city's financial crisis, but showing a resiliency and a strength on the part of the staff that has enabled it to make the best of a bad situation. In its fight for a larger share of the city budget, the school system has moved into a new adversary role with the city administration. The first of a series of articles on the status of New York City's public schools appears today. [1:2-3.]

New York City officials, under heavy pressure from the United States Treasury Department, will make a major effort in the next few days to achieve an agreement in principle with the municipal unions to insure peace on the labor front and Federal approval for further loans to the city. Treasury Secretary William E. Simon has asked for a workable financial plan and an agreement with the unions as loan conditions. [3:1-3.]

Veto a Surprise

One of the important moves of the Carey administration was his veto of the Stavisky school-aid bill, which required New York City to spend a fixed proportion of its budget on schools. Ordinarily, this kind of action is announced by the press secretary or at a news conference. But on the night the Governor vetoed the bill, Mr. Laird, having been assured that nothing would happen that evening, had gone to play tennis with a reporter. The news of the veto, which was signed shortly before midnight, was first brought out by Carey aides who told waiting reporters about it. In the midst of that conversation, Mr. Carey wandered out and, according to one reporter, proceeded to give a somewhat different version of why he had vetoed the bill than what had just been stated by his aides. "From now on," says Mr. Vlasto, the new press secretary, "if we have a possible veto on an important bill, the telling reporters about it and I will alert them to it when he signs it." Legislators Back Today For Last Leg of Session

By LINDA GREENHOUSE

ALBANY, June 20—The Legislature returns here tomorrow for a week-long recess for the final leg of a session that brought the state back from the edge of fiscal collapse and forced legislators to make painful adjustments to a public life that has a shortage of public money.

The remaining week or two of the 1976 session will be almost anticlimactic. For once, no urgent crisis faces the members on their return after a week of carrying nominating petitions and attending political dinners. Of the dozen or so issues that remain to be resolved, some are close to compromise solutions such as court reform and juvenile justice. Others, such as rent control and pension reform, are so inherently controversial as to preclude true compromise, and so will be patched over and deferred for another year.

Whatever the last-minute decisions, the history of the 1976 session has already been written in the complicated legislation and ill-founded criticism. As the session progressed, the mood of uncertainty evolved into acrimony and confrontation. The antagonists were not so much the Democratic-controlled Assembly and the Republican-controlled Senate, but the Assembly and Governor Carey, each of which accused the other of arrogance and lack of regard for the other's difficulties.

Mr. Blumenthal and the Speaker, Stanley Steingut, were under indictment for acts that many of their colleagues regarded as normal political behavior rather than crimes (Mr. Blumenthal was subsequently cleared). The indictments, seldom referred to publicly, contributed to a suspicious and defensive tone.

The defensiveness was increased by lower court decisions, that declared illegal the legislators' long-standing practice of paying their leaders and ranking committee members an extra stipend beyond the regular salary. The Court of Appeals upheld the Legislature's position on the extra allowances last week, but only after legislators had to face months of what they considered unfair and ill-founded criticism.

As the session progressed, the mood of uncertainty evolved into acrimony and confrontation. The antagonists were not so much the Democratic-controlled Assembly and the Republican-controlled Senate, but the Assembly and Governor Carey, each of which accused the other of arrogance and lack of regard for the other's difficulties.

These efforts left neither energy nor money for the kind of flashy program initiatives that legislators like to be able to take back to their constituents. Nor does it seem likely the Legislature will be able to return very soon to the steady climate of an expanding economy when election-year enrichments were drafted as easily as the press releases announcing them to the voters back home.

CONSTANCE WELCH, 77 DRAMA TEACHER, 77

Constance Welch, who taught drama at Yale University for 38 years, until her retirement in 1967, died yesterday at her home in New Haven after a long illness. She was 77 years old.

Miss Welch was an associate professor of play production at Yale, where her students included Julie Harris, Paul Newman and Robert Brustein, dean of the Yale Drama School.

After reaching mandatory retirement age, she continued to teach until 1974 at Southern Connecticut State College, Bridgeport University and, finally, at Florida Atlantic University.

Besides directing student productions at Yale and other universities, Miss Welch also was active in summer stock productions in Lake Placid and Lake George, N.Y., and Kingston, R.I. She also served as dramatic coach for Broadway plays such as "Brother Rat" in 1936, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois, 1838, and The Philadelphia Story" in 1939.

In addition, Miss Welch was dramatic coach for Romeo and Juliet, starring Susan Strasberg, in a 1934 television production for the Kraft Theater and directed the Yale Radio Plays series based on scripts by Yale students of playwrights.

SAMUEL BICKLEY, 67, A RADIO-TV ACTOR

Samuel Feltor (Tony) Bickley, an actor who played supporting roles in many radio and television shows, died Saturday in Norwalk (Conn.) Hospital after a short illness. He was 67 years old and lived at 671 West Road, New Canaan.

Mr. Bickley's most recent appearances on daytime television shows were in "The Life," "Secret Storm," "From These Roots" and "Verdict is Yours."

He also had parts in earlier TV shows, including "Studio One," "Kraft Music Hall," "Robert Montgomery Presents," "The Web," "The Big Story" and "Broadway Beat."

Mr. Bickley's stage credits included parts with Maurice Evans in "Mad as a Hatter" with Katharine Hepburn in "Without Love" and with Melvyn Douglas in "The Best Man."

Surviving are his wife, the former Ann Clark, two daughters, Tanya and Sheri Dean, and two grandchildren.

The members of the San Juan Committee, which sponsored the event under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of New York, have in the past crowded upon these illegal activities, and yesterday was no exception. Plainclothes and uniformed police officers circled the fiesta area and told hawkers of dice and liquor to close up shop, but they did not issue summonses because, one police officer said, that might "ignite the situation."

At the time of his decision to cancel the events, Mr. Lang said, "I hadn't the vaguest idea that they were black concerts. I didn't know if they were black, white, green or polka dot. All I wanted to know was 'will this concert at this place at this time be hazardous?'"

Americana '76 Bazaar Delights One Million Visitors

By LESLIE MAITLAND
They picked through antique jewelry, peered through old binoculars and posed for pictures in Revolutionary War garb — all while feasting on such New York specialties as knishes, calzones, egg rolls and quiche Lorraine.

There were collections of crystal, silver pottery, furniture, paintings, pillows, plants, clocks, furs, belts, beads, buttons, rugs, herbs, toys, baskets, crafts, glass, shoes, books and bric-a-brac of every kind — just to give a small sample.

"I don't like him," she announced. "He's scary." Her brother, Richard, 6, also was not happy when the Fifth Connecticut Continental Line fired a loud rifle volley to salute the Mayor before he addressed the crowd.

Others nodded in agreement. According to a spokesman for the Department of Civic Affairs and Public Events, this year's fair drew about one million people, which she said was slightly more than last year's based on Police Department estimates of people passing through the street between 11 A.M. and dusk.

In short, visitors to yesterday's Americana '76 bazaar made 52d Street — known as Swing Street, west of Fifth Avenue, during its jazz heyday 40 years ago — swing again, but this time the action went straight across Manhattan.

Spider Man Present
Some of them were animate, and they drew a mixed response. "I saw Spider Man," said Julia Beame, the Mayor's 4-year-old granddaughter, pointing to a man who was dressed up like the comic book character and who crouched on top of a telephone booth across the street from the Americana Hotel.

Still, in places, walking became virtually impossible because of entertainers who drew crowds that lingered. Near Third Avenue, for example, a man who danced while holding fire rods brought a halt to virtually everything happening around him.

Across the street from the 21 Club, where wine was selling for $1 a glass, Gloria Johnson and Walter Rinaldi lured an appreciative and dense as they sang parts of "La Traviata."

New York City's School System Weathers the Fiscal Crisis

not use terms like "catastrophic," "devastating," and "demoralizing" to describe the impact on the system of waves of budget cuts.

Economy measures during 1975-76 forced the system to drop 21,000 employees, more than half of them teachers; shorten the school week for pupils 90 minutes; increase average class size by four or five pupils; and eliminate or substantially curtail important school programs and services.

Contractual limits on class size—31 pupils to a class in elementary schools and 32 in the junior high schools—were ignored or circumvented in many schools.

According to the Board of Education, this year's total budget of nearly $2.8 billion—a reduction of $74 million from 1974-75—was really $270 million below the amount needed to maintain programs and services at last year's level.

The $270 million includes the sums needed to offset inflation and meet higher mandatory costs, such as pensions and debt service.

Anker's View

"Behind every budget slash there is a child whose life is being changed by the economy we were forced to make," School Chancellor Irving Anker said grimly.

To determine the impact of the city's financial crisis upon the elementary and junior high schools and to see how the system had responded, New York Times reporters spent several weeks recently visiting schools and local districts and speaking to administrators, teachers, pupils, parents, city officials, community spokesmen and others.

Among the reporters' findings were:

1. The budget cuts have affected, in varying but substantial ways, all of the 1.1 million pupils in the system and the tens of thousands of youths and adults who would normally attend after-school and evening programs. With schools making efforts to lessen the damage to instruction in the basic subjects, other areas—such as art and music, guidance and counseling and library services—have suffered greatly.

2. The layoffs of teachers and other staff members is low. Many feel that they have been treated shabbily by the city and there is considerable resentment toward their unions for not being able to do more to protect against layoffs.

3. Public concern about school support, which appeared to be at a low ebb when the city was tottering on the brink of default, has picked up substantially in recent months. There are also moves underway now to assure greater public scrutiny of school priorities and expenditures. One result is the formation by a coalition of 13 major civic and community groups of a new watchdog unit, the Educational Priorities Panel.

4. The morale of teachers and other staff members is low. Many feel that they have been treated shabbily by the city and there is considerable resentment toward their unions for not being able to do more to protect against layoffs.

New York City schoolchildren give their views of spending cutbacks.

receiving a relatively low priority from a city administration that was striving to avert default or, if that occurred, to maintain essential life-support services.

Dr. Gifford cites City Hall figures to show that over the last three years the schools received 21.6 percent of the city's total expenses budget, but had to absorb 25.4 percent of this year's citywide budget reductions. "That is a disproportionate cut," he said.

Tax Funds Rise

Even with the cuts, the school system received 3.1 percent more in city tax levy funds this year than last year. But the increase is deceptive—the increased funds were earmarked for debt service, pensions and other items over which the Board of Education has little or no control.

The actual amount available for education programs and services, according to the board, was sharply reduced. The loss, moreover, was compounded by substantial reductions in Federal funds and revenue from other sources.

Assertions that the schools were being made to suffer disproportionately—which Mayor Beame vigorously denied—figured in the recent debate over the Stavisky-Goodman bill, guaranteeing the city schools a specified minimum share of the city budget. Despite protests from the Mayor and a veto by Governor Carey, the bill was enacted by the State Legislature at the urging of the Board of Education, the United Federation of Teachers and parent organizations.

But the city has served notice that it intends to challenge that law. And the school board, which recently hired a lawyer for the purpose, has warned that it will sue the city to obtain the additional Stavisky-Goodman money. The system estimates it should gain $121 million next year under the law.

However, the suit could exacerbate the hard feelings generated by the fight over the Goodman-Stavisky bill. "An adversary relationship," First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti said last week, "would not be good for either the city or the schools."

Just as the Board of Education has accused the city of treating the schools unfairly, others have accused the board of not being fair in the way it distributed budget cuts within the system.

Dr. Lewis L. Friedman, the chief budget analyst for the new Educational Priorities Panel has charged that the board was protecting headquarters operations at the expense of classroom services.

Dr. Gifford, in denying the charge, asserted that "this year's appalling 12.8 percent reduction in instruction was actually exceeded by a 14.9 percent reduction in headquarters and support services."

But the critics still feel that more cuts are possible at headquarters. They question whether, for example, the seven salaried members of the Board of Education each need two assistants and a secretary as well as a car and driver.

On the local level there is growing concern that decentralization, which began here in 1970, may ultimately become a casualty of the budget crisis. More and more fiscal decisions that affect district operations come out of central headquarters.

"Decentralization has turned into a farce," said Philip Kaplan, president of the New York City School Boards Association. "We have a Chancellor who supersedes a local board every time his toenail hurts."

During the current school year, Chancellor Anker has superseded authorities in 11 local districts, which is more than the total number of superintendents in the five previous years of decentralized operations.

Of the current number, five were superseded for refusing to obey the central mandate to shorten school time for pupils—schools in District 3 on the West Side are still not in total compliance—and five were superseded for refusing to cooperate with state and Federal ethnic surveys. Most of the supersessions were for brief periods.

Charges Traded

But even while the charges and countercharges flew and new budget cuts were announced, throughout the school system teachers and supervisors—often despite personal concerns over whether they would soon lose their jobs—generally went about the business of education.

For many educators, it was a period of merely "somehow getting through the term," as a dejected Brooklyn teacher put it. For others, it was a time of extraordinary personal effort—"your finest hour," said Ariane Pedone, chairman of Community School Board 27 in Queens.

In Community School District 10 in the northwest Bronx, Dr. Theodore Wiesenfeld, the superintendent, said, "It was, all in all, a fantastic year. 'The teachers really worked,'

he said. "We were determined that the kids were not going to be short-changed no matter what. You really can't ever make up what you lose."

Spirit of Cooperation

If a school lacked a music teacher, he continued, a teacher with skill in music would volunteer to help out. The same thing occurred in other fields.

"I didn't hear anyone say," Dr. Wiesenfeld added, "Look at how the city has treated us. Let's get even."

The district, one of the fastest growing in the system, had an influx this year of 4,000 new pupils, many of them black and Puerto Rican youngsters who moved from burned-out sections of the Bronx. Most joined District 10 behind grade-level in reading. In the same period, the district lost 2,000 youngsters, most of them from middle-class families that moved to the suburbs.

Even so, the district's reading scores are virtually unchanged from last year.

"It was almost as if, with the shortened school day and all the problems, everyone decided to work even harder to make the most of each minute of class time," said Sylvia Bloom, the local board's president.

New York City Faces a Health Emergency

An Open Letter to Governor Carey

Hon. Hugh L. Carey
Executive Chamber
Albany, New York

The City of New York is facing a major health crisis. District 1199, representing 40,000 workers in the voluntary non-profit hospitals and homes, is threatening a city-wide strike on July 1, if it does not achieve its economic demands.

AT LEAST 20 DEATHS IN OUR INSTITUTIONS DURING THAT TRAGIC PERIOD WERE ATTRIBUTED TO THE STRIKE IN A REPORT PUBLISHED EARLIER THIS YEAR BY DR. LOWELL BELLIN, COMMISSIONER OF HEALTH OF NEW YORK CITY.

YOU, THE GOVERNOR OF NEW YORK STATE, CANNOT LET THIS DISASTER HAPPEN AGAIN.

For your Special Assistant for Health, Dr. Kevin Cahill, simply to repeat, "The State has no money," does not provide any basis for resolution of this imminent crisis. District 1199 has rejected a wage freeze proposed by the League and demands costly increases.

The Board of Health has recommended negotiations on a "one-time catch-up cost-of-living adjustment," while at the same time stating:

"The onerous financial burdens of the League have been the basis on which the League has refused to do more than reject the demands of the Union. Given the uncertainties referred to above, it is unclear as to whether or not the parties can successfully consummate a bilateral agreement without third party assistance."

The Board also recommended binding arbitration.

THE FACTS ARE THAT HOSPITALS DO NOT HAVE THE MONEY FOR SUCH ADJUSTMENTS. FURTHER, THE HOSPITALS CANNOT AGREE TO ARBITRATION UNLESS THE STATE AND CITY GUARANTEE THE FINANCING OF THE FULL COST OF THE ARBITRATION AWARD.

The hospitals and nursing homes cannot give a cost-of-living increase without themselves receiving a cost-of-living increase to pay for the rising costs of food, medical supplies, malpractice insurance, energy, as well as wage increases, and the other things that go into providing quality patient care.

There is no doubt that a strike would disrupt all clinic and inpatient services and ultimately would lead to the closing of the hospitals and nursing homes upon which the metropolitan New York area depends.

A STATE OF HEALTH EMERGENCY WILL EXIST IN NEW YORK CITY BEGINNING JULY 1, 1976.

We await your word.

Rain Limits Qualifying To 2 Pocono Drivers

LONG POND, Pa., June 20 — Dick Simon did a rain dance for four hours today and was on the pole for the second richest automobile race, the Schaefer 500.

Simon was the fastest of the two drivers who got in qualifying runs before the rains hit Pocono International Raceway. The other 33 drivers, including all the favorites, will get their turns tomorrow, weather permitting.

"How about that? The pole for a 500-mile race," said the 42-year-old Simon, a popular "backmarker" on the United States Auto Club championship circuit, "Come on rain!"

Simon averaged 174.698 miles an hour in a Volstead-Offenhauser for his four runs around the 2½-mile, three-cornered track. Al Loquasto, the only other driver to complete the qualifying for the $402,800 race next Sunday, averaged 173.085 in a McLaren-Offy.

Miss Guthrie Waits In between the runs of Simon and Loquasto, Simon's teammate, James Guthrie, passed up her turn and went to the back of the line. The Volstead crew changed engines in Miss Guthrie's car last night and a new engine has to "settle" before top speeds can be risked.

"Well, kid, you know what this rain did for you?" Simon asked his drenched teammate when she reached the shelter of the garage shortly after the first rain hit at 11:45 A.M. "It means you'll have another half-hour warmup before they start again."

After the warmup session tomorrow, they'll start again at 10 A.M. and admission will be free. Bob Harkey, the poor guy who was out on the track

Francis Wins L.I. Amateur

By GORDON S. WHITE JR. Special to The New York Times

OCEANSIDE, L.I., June 20 — A few minutes after Gene Francis won the Long Island amateur golf championship for the fourth time today, the stocky 38-year-old player said, "I haven't played better than this since I was in college. Come to think of it, I don't think I ever hit the ball better than I am hitting it now."

And no one else could remember, either, when Francis had played better in the last two decades of metropolitan-area tournament action, as he routed Duane Hayden, the 1968 Long Island champion, 11 and 9 in the scheduled 36-hole final at Middle Bay County Club.

Francis continued to hit accurate tee shots and putt very well to add this triumph to the Long Island amateur titles he had won in 1963, 1969 and 1973. He has been in the association's amateur final four years in a row, but lost the title to Bob Murphy in 1974 and 1975.

Now Francis is tied with Murphy for the second most Long Island amateur crowns. Frank Strafaci holds the record of seven, but he is no longer in competition. Murphy has turned professional, but Francis still has a number of years of golf ahead of him.

Hayden approached the 21st hole with a fine shot that put the ball 8½ feet from the pin on the par-4 hole. Francis got just inside that on his wedge shot, and after Hayden dropped the birdie putt, Francis dropped his for a birdie.

The final ended at the 27th, when Hayden hooked into the left rough and then hit into water. Francis was on the edge of the green in three, when Hayden walked over to him to shake his hand, conceding the hole, the match and the championship.

Freeman Leads Victors for Olympic Sail B

By STEVE CADY Special to The New York Times

ASSOCIATION ISLAND, N.Y., June 20 — Reflecting the broad-based strength of American yachting skippers from Texas, New York, California, Florida, New Jersey and Hawaii qualified today for next month's Olympic sailing competition.

In the final events of a seven-race series on Lake Ontario, the strategy for class leaders was to shadow their closest rivals. On a cold and rainy day of light air, the match-racing tactics worked for some, but not for others.

Clutch first-place performances by Norm Freeman of Ithaca, N.Y., in the Flying Dutchman Class and Bob Whitcomb of Pensacola, Fla., in the 470's moved them past faltering point leaders into Olympic berths.

In the Tempest Class, though, Dennis Conner of San Diego stalked Argyle Campbell the way he stalked rival 12-meter skippers as starting-line helmsman and tactician for Courageous in the 1974 America's Cup defense.

Results of Olympic Sailing Trials Soling Class — 1. John Kolius, La Porte, Tex.; 2. 27 minutes 7. Robbie Nelson, San Diego; 3. 27.2. Bobby Morgan, Santa Barbara; 4. 27.5. Bill Bushap, Mercer Island, Wash.

McFaul earned his place when lack of air on the outer-most course prevented the Tornado "catamaran" from completing their race within the 4½-hour time limit. Under the rules, the Tornado results automatically reverted to the standing after six races. Had today's race been completed, McFaul was doing well enough to have won the series, anyway.

After more than a week of pressure sailing by 157 superbly conditioned skippers and crews, this was not the time for point leaders to take wild gambles. But the "fukley breeze" never more than about eight knots in velocity, managed to produce some dramatic rolls of the dice.

In the 470 Class, for example, all Skip Whyte of Cambridge, Mass., needed was a seventh to nail down a spot on the team. He moved up to second at the final weather leg but then dropped back to 10th.

Freeman, a 44-year-old attorney, moved past Argyle Diaz and Gordy Bowers in the Flying Dutchman standing with a remarkable third straight victory. He wound up with a score of 28 points, the same total he had after the first four races of the scoring system, a first place counts for zero points. Each contestant is allowed to discard his worst race.

Had Diaz finished fourth or better today, he still would have beaten Freeman. But he could do no better than sixth. "He's been waiting for this for 20 years," a friend of the winner said, after Freeman built a huge lead on the opening leg and came home a half-mile ahead of his nearest opponent.

Pate, Rookie Pro, Takes Open By 2 Strokes With 68 for 277

By JOHN S. RADOSTA Special to The New York Times DULUTH, Ga., June 20—The finale of the 76th United States Open today turned into a four-man scramble in the last three holes and from it emerged a surprise winner, Jerry Pate, a 22-year-old rookie who joined the pro golf tour only six months ago. It was his first victory as a professional.

Jack Nicklaus, Nicklaus won the United States Amateur title in 1959 and 1961, and soon after he turned pro in 1962 he won the United States Open. He was 22 years old at the time. Pate won the United States Amateur in 1974, turned pro last fall and joined the tour at the start of this year. Like Nicklaus, he is a 22-year-old winner. But there is a difference, too: "Jack was heavier than I am," said Pate. It was something of an understatement, because Nicklaus in those days was known as "the fat kid from Columbus."

Affairs of

Anderson Holding Up

Ga., June 20—Up on the TV screen in the Atlanta Club today, 22-year-old Jerry Pate appeared in Alabama red shirt and pink plaid slacks. His completed, Jack Nicklaus was watching the final of the United States Open golf championship.

"I was surprised," Jack Nicklaus was asked, "that he held up so well in the pressure of the final hole. When I was that age," Jack Nicklaus replied, "if you win, they've got to learn how to hold up."

Learning How to Lose "I'm a caddy then," he was saying now, "that's too many tough courses too good." Pate, who finished second by a stroke, as disappointing," he recalled, "I lost the title on the last two holes. I told my name's John Consider, that I couldn't grip on my 7-iron on those two holes. That's sure was like. But it's like Hubert Green, he told me, you have to learn how to lose and learn how to win."

On the 7,015-yard Highlands course that the pros complained about (as they always do in the Open is conducted), Jerry Pate shot a 277 in a memorable finish. He not only also held off Tom Weiskopf, Al Geiberger and Lee Trevino, each much more experienced. As second round, he hadn't been awed. "I'm playing well," he said Friday, "experience is much to do with it. I play the tougher courses. Kendrick Pate has been playing golf since he was 10. He has an address in Pensacola, Fla., and is a Coca-Cola distributor. But he lives four with Soozil, his blonde bride of seven months. A few credits short of a business degree at the University of Alabama, he turned pro last summer in the Open as an amateur. He failed to qualify for the British Open, but competed in several other tournaments, then qualified for the Professional Golf Association tour. He also paid back the $4,000 he borrowed from Crawford Rainwater, a family friend, on the tour.

Fear 2d Runner Bert, Gains Berth

By FRANK LITSKY Special to The New York Times DREXEL, June 20—A string of large muscle behind the thigh. Two physicians and a chiropractor who worked on him said the problem was inflamed muscle, complicated by fluid caused by strain. They said Williams would be fully recovered in a week. They hoped to have him ready for the 200-meter trials tomorrow, but few others thought the 22-year-old Williams could recover in time to run tomorrow, let alone run four 200-meter races in two days and qualify for the Olympic team. His coach, Brooks Johnson, was resigned. "I don't think he will run in the 200," said Johnson. He'll just have to wait until after the Olympics to beat all those guys." There were two other finalists and preliminaries in six other events at the University of Oregon's Hayward Field. The crowd of 12,500 saw Al Feuerbach, George Woods and Pete Shnock shot-put and Kathy Schmidt lead the three qualifiers in the women's javelin throw. Feuerbach, from San Jose, Calif., put the shot 69 feet 3 1/2 inches and then said, "I feel like I underachieved, but who cares?" Miss Schmidt, from Pacific Palisades, Calif., threw the family," he recalled, "because I didn't want them saying don't worry about it. I wanted to know that I had to win." When he found his tee shot in the rough on the 18th hole today, he showed how much he wanted to win. He knew John Mahaffey had eliminated himself with that wood shot into the water. He knew he needed a 4 to win and a 5 to tie both Weiskopf and Geiberger, who had completed their rounds ahead of him. But if he misplayed his 5-iron, he might take a 6 and lose. "I didn't want to play safe," he explained later. "I knew I had to go for it. And when I hit it, I knew I'd won the Open."

Another Loss for Mahaffey

Wisely, when he arrived on the 18th green, he checked with Harry Easterly, the president of the United States Golf Association, regarding how many putts he needed to win. "I kept asking him if I could 'two-putt,'" he said. "I knew I could make it, but I asked him, 'Are you sure I can two-putt?'" Jerry Pate needed only one putt. His finish captivated millions of TV viewers. It also captivated the U.S.G.A., which selected the Atlanta Athletic Club site as a Bicentennial tribute to Bob Jones, the legendary four-time winner of the Open and a member of the A.A.C. until his death in 1971. To complete the scenario, Jerry Pate's reimbursed sponsor, Crawford Rainwater, often played golf with Bobby Jones here and at August National, the site of the Masters tournament. But the arrival of Jerry Pate as an Open champion did not captivate John Mahaffey, who lost the Open in a playoff with Lou Graham last year. But at least John Mahaffey lost with class. "As soon as I hit that 5-iron on 18," Jerry Pate said, "John told me, 'Great shot.' That's the kind of guy he is." But the loss of the Open again will torment John Mahaffey, who remembered that it "stayed with me for six months" last year. With bogeys on each of the last three holes today, his memory of this loss might stay with John Mahaffey for more than six months. The memory of winning it will stay with Jerry Pate for a lifetime.

Yankees Win, 6-3, for Sixth Straight; Angry Matlack Beaten by Giants, 9-2

Lyle Saves All Six Games on Road Trip

By MURRAY CHASS Special to The New York Times CHICAGO, June 20—The Yankees, a better road team than the Harlem Globetrotters, wrapped up a perfect tour of the Midwest today, defeating the Chicago White Sox, 6-3.

The victory was the Yankees sixth in six games on this trip and 22d against six losses on the road this season. At Yankee Stadium, the Yankees have won 15 games and lost 16.

"Maybe we should be a team without a home park," said Dock Ellis, after gaining his seventh triumph with help from—who else?—Sparky Lyle. Lyle is the Marquis Haynes of the Yankees' Globetrotter-like success. Just as Haynes dazzled opponents with his magical dribbling act, Lyle befuddles the opposition with his late-inning pitching performances. Those performances have become as routine as Haynes's dribbling. Everyone has come to expect them every game.

Lyle appeared in relief for the sixth straight game today, which means he appeared in all of the games on the trip. This time, he relieved Ellis in the eighth inning with two out and Pat Kelly on second with a run-scoring double. The 31-year-old left-hander struck out Jim Spencer, ending that inning, then retired the White Sox in order in the ninth for his 12th save.

That gave Lyle a record of no runs, four hits and no walks allowed plus four saves in the 10 1/2 innings he pitched in the six games. Actually, he hasn't allowed a run in his last nine appearances totaling 15 innings. In that time he has given up just seven hits and no walks and picked up five saves.

Lyle has pitched so frequently in recent weeks that Manager Billy Martin might

Cites Mets' Disparate Rules

By JOSEPH DURSO The mood of hostility sweeping professional baseball spread yesterday to the New York Mets, who absorbed two attacks in Shea Stadium—one by the San Francisco Giants, and the other by Jon Matlack, who complained that the Mets were being ruined because "there are 17 sets of rules around here."

The initial assault on the Mets came in the first inning when the Giants, last in the National League's West, raked Matlack for five runs en route to a 15-hit, 9-2 victory. The second assault came in the sullensness of the locker room, when Matlack opened up on (teammates) who "don't even practice catching fly balls."

Matlack has been the hottest pitcher on the team, with eight victories in nine decisions, and four straight going into the final game of the series with the Giants. But he knew he was doomed after the Giants got five hits, two walks and five runs the first time they batted. One of the hits was a double by Derrel Thomas, who threw his bat at the ball, another was a two-run single by Ken Reitz, who golfed the ball out of the dirt with two outs and two strikes, and the crusher was a double by Darrell Evans on a fly that was misplayed by Dave Kingman. "The trouble with this club," Matlack said in an interview before the Mets flew to St. Louis, "is that there are 17 sets of rules around here. You've got to show up promptly for the Mayor's Trophy game, but you don't have to take fly balls in practice. If you did, you might catch that ball in the first inning. "It would kill me if I wasn't a complete ballplayer, if I didn't try to run, field and catch. Guys like Ed Kranepool are out there in practice shagging flies, even though they don't always play the outfield. But no-other guys take their swings in hitting practice and never take fly balls, never check the sun or the wind or their own reactions. "That was a goofy inning, but they should never have got five runs in it, not if he catches the ball. The manager

2 Collisions Mar Tall Ships Race

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE Special to The New York Times

HAMILTON, Bermuda, June 20—A collision between two of the largest sailing ships in the world marred the spectacular start of the Tall Ships race to Newport, R. I., today. In the accident, one mile off the east end of Bermuda, Juan Sebastian de Elcano lost 60 feet off the top of her 180-foot foremast and had to withdraw. She is the Spanish naval training vessel and, at 370 feet in length and 2,400 tons, the second largest of the 18 giant ships in the Class A Division.

The other ship was Libertad, the 345-foot Argentinian full-rigged vessel. Her mainmast and mizzen were ripped by the bowsprit of Elcano but she kept on going. Yachting observers believe that Elcano was the ship that could claim foul. She had been previously abused by Libertad and possibly also by the Colombian ship, the 243-foot Gloria, which had the boldest, fastest getaway of all. Although they had 632 miles to go to Newport, several of the vessels attacked the 1.8-mile-long starting line with all the pushy vigor of dinghy sailors off Larchmont or Manhasset in Long Island Sound.

she writes, "He embraced me tenderly," and then turns her mind to her school schedule for the following week.

"Veronique" is very funny in a low-key way and beautifully directed by Miss Guillemin, who has, I suspect, made exactly the kind of film she set out to—clear and direct, yet full of reserved intelligence and appreciation for the complexities of feelings and motives.

The Cast

THE TENANT, directed by Roman Polanski, screenplay by Gerard Brach and Roland Topor...

character who might have been invented by an Edgar Allan Poe who'd had the opportunity to read about Raskolnikov and Josef K. He's a particularly Eastern European kind of late 19th-century outsider set down in contemporary Paris.

"The Tenant," which opened yesterday at Loews Tower East, is the most successful and most consistently authentic Polanski film in years, and in saying that I realize that a lot of people prefer the Polanski who turns out films more or less tailored to popular tastes...

"The Tenant" displays the clear-eyed narrative discipline of his early "Knife in the Water" and "Repulsion," but without the self-indulgent pomposity that have made a lot of his later 'personal' films...

"The Tenant," adapted by Gerard Brach and Mr. Polanski from a novel by Roland Topor, tells the story of the strange series of occupations that take place when a young woman, a filing clerk in what appears to be a library...

The previous tenant, was unknown to Trelkovsky, but he makes it a point to visit her in the hospital. He is fascinated by what he sees, a body swathed in bandages, one leg in a cast, only one blackened eye and the mouth visible. He has thoughtfully brought her some oranges to suck.

During this visit he also meets one of the young woman's friends, an apparently sweet but enigmatic girl named Stella (Isabelle Ad-jan). Leaving the hospital together, they have a drink in a bar and go to a movie where, as best as one can in a theater balcony, they make love.

Little by little Trelkovsky becomes convinced that the other tenants in the building have somehow been responsible for the earlier tenant's suicide attempt. The concierge (Shelley Winters) either ignores him or insults him. The landlord (Melvyn Douglas) monitors his arrivals and departures. The tenants spy on him. One night a mysterious woman (Lia Kedrova) appears at his door with her crippled daughter to report that there's a conspiracy afoot to have her kicked out of the building.

Little by little, too, the other tenants force Trelkovsky against his will, to assume the identity of the now-dead earlier tenant. One morning he wakes up in full drag, missing the tooth that the dead girl was missing. At a party Trelkovsky says to a friend with a good deal of understatement: "These days relationships with neighbors can get very complicated."

Movies about madness tend to lose me after a certain point. The tension vanishes when one realizes that any absurdity, any trick is available to the film maker. The director and his audience must share a set of rules for what passes for ordinary behavior if suspense is to be maintained. These rules do not exist in "The Tenant."

That "The Tenant" works so well is because it's not strictly about madness, though that is its narrative form. It's about emotional isolation that has become physical. The forces that occupy Trelkovsky's mind were invited in by him, the outsider.

The film is superbly acted by Mr. Polanski, Shelley Winters, and Miss Winters, who might not be entirely convincing as a Parisian concierge in a realistic film, but who fits into this nightmare perfectly. The French actors, including Miss Adjan, sound as if their English dialogue had been dubbed by others—not very intelligently—the result being that the performances no longer seem to be strictly their own.

Mr. Polanski also has a gifted collaborator in Sven Nykvist, the cinematographer whose camera plays the role of narrator, directing our attention to curious details, offering humble asides, as 19th-century authors once felt free to do without embarrassment or excuse.

Music

Entirely Mozart at the Caramoor Festival

By PETER G. DAVIS

The Caramoor Festival got under way Saturday night, slightly dampened by a persistent misty rain that drizzled throughout the concert. Most of the audience gamely took shelter under the awnings that line the sides of the Venetian Theater on the Walter and Lucie Rosen estate in Katonah, N.Y., where the festival has been held annually for 31 seasons.

Julius Rudel conducted the orchestra in an all-Mozart program—a refreshing and even daring decision during these Bicentennial days when a flavor of Americana has been almost tiresomely de rigueur for summer music. Three symphonies spanning the composer's short creative life formed the focal point of the evening, while Rudolf Firkušny was also on hand as soloist in the Piano Concerto in D minor (K. 466).

Chronologically, the trio of symphonies began with K. 45b, written in 1768 when Mozart was 12, then proceeded to No. 33 in B flat (1779) and concluded with the "Jupiter," his last symphony, composed in 1788.

It was clever of Mr. Rudel to juxtapose these works. They not only show Mozart's growth as a symphonist but also make us feel the key sequence of the four Brahms symphonies and, if transposed down a tone, the four Schumann symphonies.

The performances had a great deal of character and energy. Mr. Rudel played up the dynamic contrasts and dramatic nature of the music with undeniably effective results, although smooth instrumental textures, poised phrasing and overall stylistic elegance were occasionally sacrificed along the way. Even so, it was good to hear Mozart played with such vitality.

Mr. Firkušny gave a polished, refined account of the concerto. His rather businesslike treatment of the music missed some of the deeper currents running through this work and seemed a bit at odds with Mr. Rudel's highly colored orchestral accompaniment. The differing approaches of these two musicians, both based on valid premises, only prove how difficult it is to balance and proportion the subtle details of any Mozart score.

Newport Jazz Festival Opens Season on Friday

By JOHN S. WILSON

The Newport Jazz Festival's fifth season in New York, which will begin on Friday, will be longer than previous Newport Festivals — 11 days instead of the customary 10 — and will reach into hitherto untouched areas, both geographic (New Jersey) and musical (a children's program, a musical play and a blend of jazz and flamenco dancing).

The most ubiquitous sounds will be the music of Duke Ellington and Count Basie. Four concerts will be devoted to Mr. Ellington's music of the 1920's, 30's and 40's, and Count Basie and his orchestra will make three appearances — at a concert at Waterloo Village in New Jersey next Saturday, at 8 P.M.; at a reunion of members of the Basie band of the 50's at Carnegie Hall on Saturday, July 3, at 11:30 P.M.; and at the festival's final event, a musical play at Roseland Ballroom on Monday, July 5, at 9 P.M.

The festival, which normally begins on a Friday evening and runs through the second Sunday following, is being extended an extra day to Monday, July 5, this year because Independence Day, which falls on Sunday, is being celebrated as a holiday on Monday. During that day a free outdoor "52d Street Jazz Fair" will be held from 11 A.M. until 4 P.M. on Broadway, between 50th and 54th Streets.

3 Events at Village

In search of an outdoor setting that might recapture some of the atmosphere the festival had during its 17 years in Newport, R.I., George Wein, the producer of the festival, has scheduled three events at Waterloo Village, near Stanhope, N. J. Two will be afternoon "picnics" from noon to 5 P.M. — a gospel picnic next Saturday and a jazz picnic next Sunday — at which the audience can roam from one area to another in the Colonial village to hear various performing groups.

The gospel picnic will feature choirs and soloists from the metropolitan area while the jazz picnic, organized by the New Jersey Jazz Society, will focus on New Jersey jazz bands supplemented by solo performances by Earl (Fatha) Hines and Dick Wellstood, both pianists, and Bucky Pizzarelli, a guitarist. When Count Basie's band plays at Waterloo Village on Saturday night, it will be joined by Eubie Blake, the 83-year-old pianist, composer and singer.

The children's concert, to be held at 2 P.M. on Friday, July 2, at the Loeb Center of New York University, produced by Jack Kleinsinger, will bring together a performance of George Kleinsinger's "Tubby the Tuba Meets a Dixieland Band" and a New Orleans jazz parade.

The festival's musical play is a two-hour concert version of "Big Man" — the Legend of John Henry — composed by the late Cannonball Adderley and his brother, Nat, with lyrics by Diane Lampert and Peter Farrow and a book by Miss Lampert and George W. George. Joe Williams will sing the title role and Nat Adderley's Black and Blues Band will provide the accompaniment on Friday, July 2, at Carnegie Hall at 7:30 P.M. Jazz and flamenco dancing will come together next Saturday evening at Carnegie Hall at 7:30 when Charles Mingus's sextet will perform with the Azucena y Edo Flamenco Dance Group.

Well-Known Performers

Among the other well-known jazz performers who will be heard during the festival are Benny Goodman, Dizzy Gillespie, Thelonus Monk, Horace Silver, Buddy Rich, Lee Konitz, McCoy Tyner, Art Blakey and the big bands of Stan Kenton and Maynard Ferguson. More recent jazz styles will be represented by Billy Coham, Anthony Braxton, Keith Jarrett and Weather Report.

Sarah Vaughan, who has given a full evening solo recital at the last two Newport Festivals, will do it again on Saturday, July 3, at Carnegie Hall at 7:30, this time with strings. And the traditional boat ride up the Hudson on a Staten Island ferry on Saturday, July 3, at 10:30 A.M., 1 P.M. and 3:30 P.M., will offer, in addition to the customary pair of Dixieland bands (Kid Thomas and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band and the World's Greatest Jazz Band), a close-up view of the ships assembled from around the world for Operation Sail, which will take place the following day.

The festival opens at Carnegie Hall with two concerts by Tony Bennett, the singer, and the Bill Evans Trio, the first at 7:30 P.M., the second at 11:30.

Yanks Shut Out the Met; 'Butterfly' Moves to Park

By C. GERALD FRASER

The New York Yankees shut out the Metropolitan Opera Company at Yankee Stadium Saturday night. Literally. In fact, the opera crowd — cast, crew and audience — didn't even get inside the ball park. Yankee management, armed with predictions from its private weather service that the city faced "36 straight hours" of rain, told the Met that it would have to take its scheduled free performance of Puccini's "Madama Butterfly" elsewhere.

The Metropolitan Opera Company turned around its 11-truck caravan of staging, sound equipment, generators, instruments, chairs, music stands and dressing rooms and headed on Van Cortlandt Park's parade grounds, in the north end of the Bronx.

Despite the switch of venue, 5,000 to 10,000 people heard Anna Moffo sing the role of Cio-Cio-San at the Met's fourth free park opera of the season. And although it was misty, it didn't really rain.

From the fans' point of view, the change wasn't all that bad. Tipping wine in goblets they had brought from home, a couple sat a few feet from the stage — the man read and the woman watched and listened steadily.

Carried Away
A middle-aged man, nudged by seated spectators until he found a spot where he blocked a view, leaned on a portable tape recorder using Miss Moffo's singing of an opera's best-known aria. He was carried away that he made conductorlike motions with his hands.

Note of the spectators would have been as close to the performers at Yankee Stadium, William Buck used his cameras by setting up his camera on a tripod at the foot of the stage and when he was not taking pictures he covered his camera with a white handkerchief to protect it from the sun.

On the stage, during the final act, when she was not singing, Miss Moffo sat and covered her shoulders with a white ermine wrap to protect herself against chill.

She was joined on the stage by Shirley Love, Enrico Di Giuseppe, Richard Frederick, Robert Schur, Carlotta Odassy, Gene Boucher, Russell Christopher, Andri Dobriani, Kim Yoo and the conductor, Claus Behr.

"Madama Butterfly" was performed earlier last week in a and mutants mutandis, it is not yet a case of seque- but peat for the Government." Some of this will whiz by an American audience, which is one reason Mr. Stoppard thinks that perhaps the whole thing is a "bit thin" for Broadway. But the ele- gants of farce will appeal to anyone—including the sound of briefcases shutting, the slamming of doors, the stuff Ben Travers, the octogenarian farceur, would have loved.

"It's a briefcase" shouts the chairman. How bid—but when it comes, the audience cannot resist either the timing or the obviousness of the gag. And what of the American connection? As Mr. Stoppard explains it, the play within a play, which deals with America, came about because the director, a close friend named Ed Berman, had asked him to write a play with a Bicentennial theme. Free- socializing as usual, Mr. Stoppard ended up writing about political sex, but still felt an obligation to Mr. Berman.

E BARNES and also the soft, steely re- sence of her basic tech- nique. Mr. Nagy charmed as the Prince; he has the manner, bearing and authority, par- nered brilliantly and danced with a simple, unaffected vi- rility. Mr. Nagy really is one of nature's princes, a dancer cut out for just this kind of role. Mikhail Baryshnikov and Natalia Makarova were announced for the Bluebird pas de deux, with Mr. Barysh- nikov echoing Enrico Cecchetti's famous double in the original performance by also performing Carabosse. Alas, it was not to be— Mr. Baryshnikov had a slightly injured heel and had to cancel. In the Bluebird, their places were taken by the excellent duo of Marianne Tcherkassky and Hideo Fugakawa, while as Carabosse we had Dennis Nahat. Both Mr. Nahat, and Marcos Parades who has been alter- nating with him, make exem- plarily malevolent and cron- like witches. At the Saturday afternoon performance, which had El- sanor D'Antuono and Fer- nando Bujones repeating their performances as Aurora and the Prince, Kristine Eli- ott and Kirk Peterson danced the Bluebird pas de deux for the first time in this production. Miss Elliott was crisp, cool and contained—what a neat dancer she is—while Mr. Peterson showed style and elevation in the male role. He is an excellent demi- caractere dancer.

Ellen Burstyn Will Star In 'Aimee' on Broadway

Ellen Burstyn, winner last year of both an Oscar and a Tony respectively as best actress for her roles in "Alice Doesn't Live Here Anymore" and "Same Time, Next Year," has agreed to star in "Aimee," a play with music scheduled for Broadway next season. The actress will also appear in the subsequent film ver- sion of the play, which is based on the life of Aimee Semple McPherson, the evan- gelist who was one of America's more flamboyant personalities after World War I.

Robinson Home Given to College

WATERVILLE, Me., June 20 (AP)—The birthplace of the late poet Edwin Arlington Robinson has been given to Colby College by members of his family, the college has announced. Robinson, a three-time winner of the Pulitzer Prize for poetry, was born Dec. 22, 1869, in a house overlooking the Sheepscot River. He died in New York on April 6, 1935. Colby announced that it would maintain the birthplace as a memorial. It will be open to visitors without charge on Wednesdays and Saturdays from 2 P.M. to 4 P.M. from July 14 through Aug. 28.

Advertising
Avenue Caters to the Upscale

By PHILIP H. DOUGHERTY
Although it is one of the more popular words in advertising circles, "upscale" isn't in the dictionary. It is used to describe people and households with well above average income and education, a group loved by a goodly number of advertisers.

Judith Price, whose residence and office are at Park Avenue and 52d Street is preparing to deliver an upscale, upscale audience through the pages of her new magazine. Just a little old neighborhood publication, but what a neighborhood! She is planning to deliver the magazine— called Avenue— to 25,000 households with annual incomes of $30,000 and over, situated between Fifth and Park Avenue from 61st to 96th Streets and between Park Avenue and Third as far up as 98th Street. It is what is sometimes referred to as the chic, fashionable East Side.

Unlike most fledgling publishers, Mrs. Price (her husband is a lawyer named Peter) is not seeking publicity. She would rather say her nine-times-a-year publication debut in September and let it talk for itself. However, when word of her enterprise got out, she agreed to sit still for an interview.

A Wharton graduate and a former business reporter for Time who had her own financial and marketing consulting firm, Mrs. Price got fascinated in recent years with market segmentation. Avenue is the result of that fascination.

She's been out talking to advertisers and agencies representing appropriate products since February and has apparently been able to transmit her enthusiasm for her "magazine for and about rich people."

Already, she said, she has commitments from Tiffany, Revlon, Estée Lauder, Bergdorf Goodman, Rolls-Royce, Mercedes, BMW, Tanqueray Gin, Johnnie Walker Black Label scotch, Merrill Lynch, and E. F. Hutton.

Not merely for single pages, mind you, she's only selling schedules of three, six and nine insertions.

Avenue, which will have a controlled circulation (distributed free), is intended as a dual audience magazine with editorial material on shopping, fashion, food, the arts, sports and travel, decorating, architecture and business. Mrs. Price, editor as well as publisher, promises to be using the best available freelance talent.

The black and white page rate on a three-time contract is $1,000 and four-color $1,500.

Nobody, but nobody uses the word "downscale. Frightfully negative."

Awash With Awards
The Clio Awards for television commercials Friday night at the Americana Hotel ended the most award-filled week in the history of New York advertising. There were

O'Reilly Leaves W.R.G. to Consult

Richard T. O'Reilly, a well-known and respected adman and vice chairman and director of Wells, Rich, Greene, is getting out of the agency business and into the consulting business. W. R. G. is his first client.

Having at one time or another headed every department in an agency and having worked with the most sophisticated of clients, Mr. O'Reilly is now prepared to share his expertise (for a price) with both advertisers and agencies on such topics as agency or marketing department organization, agency-client relations, agency compensation, agency selection. In other words, just about everything.

For the next few months he'll continue to have an office at the agency, which recently named Charles Friedericks president and chief operating officer.

Mr. O'Reilly previously headed the Detroit office of N. W. Ayer and was an executive vice president of SSC&B and has worked with such clients as General the Clio ceremonies for print, radio and finally TV, the Andy Awards of the Advertising Club of New York and the Effie Awards of the New York Chapter of the American Marketing Association. It was very taxing.

And as it did on two other occasions, J. Walter Thompson led the pack on Friday night, picking up four Clios—three for Kodak spots and one for Water Pik Shower Massage. In addition, two commercials for its client Seven-Up won Clios for Robert Abel & EUE/Screen Gems, the production company. Any company involved in producing the commercial can enter it.

It is important to remember when reading about Clio winners that not all agencies enter such competitions and only those that enter can win.

There were three competitors that won three Clios each. Grey Advertising, Benton & Bowles and Bob Girso and Procter & Gamble's Harper & Steers took two, for the Anti-Defamation League; Benton & Bowles for Gillette's Trac II Razor, Texaco and Procter & Gamble's Pampers; and Bob Girso for Salada Tea, Danon's Yogurt and Diet Rite Cola. Both Needham's winners were done for Xerox.

Smith/Greenland has been named to do advertising for International Computers Ltd. of Britain, which will be introducing its new system here with an ad budget said to be more than $1 million. The first ad will run in Time, Newsweek and U. S. News &

World Report. They're out after L.B.M.

Wise Advertising meanwhile has been tapped by Somerset Importers to be agency for the Somerset Wine Company, exclusive importer of the Alexis Lichine line.

And, Henderson & Dapper got the pleasing word from Avon Products to do special advertising and sales promotion projects. Avon's major agency is Ogilvy & Mather.

It may sound like a grift smuggling operation, but the Southern Connection is in fact an advertising agency founded last month at 540 Madison Avenue by Grace Van Dyke and Virginia Haynes. The former is originally from Tennessee and the latter from Virginia. Get the connection?

They are fashion specialists and Miss Van Dyke's heavy experience has been on the agency side while her partner's background includes more advertiser and media. And they have nine clients. So there.

The best place for engineers to live and work in America has exceptional salaries, benefits, the most challenging assignments, sunny skies and a terrific lifestyle. Something else: a representative who'll be in the New York City area June 21st to interview you and answer your questions. The company is Pratt & Whitney, a leader in advanced technology, gas turbine engines and high energy laser systems. Following positions require Bachelor's or Master's degrees in appropriate disciplines, in one of the indicated special areas:
ANALYTICAL ENGINEERS
• Aero-thermodynamic analysis
• Structural analysis
• Engine performance analysis and test data reduction
• Computer simulation utilizing sophisticated mathematical models representing propulsion systems.
• Control system logic and implementation.
• Fracture mechanics (min. 5 years experience in experimental applications)
• Vibrations (experience in linear and nonlinear vibrations theory as applied to hardware design)
ANALYTICAL TURBINE ENGINEERS
• Minimum 5 years experience in turbine aerodynamics and cooling design.
• Assignments will entail conceptual design and definition of airfoils, endwalls and other turbine parts for advanced aircraft and industrial engines.
ANALYTICAL HEAT TRANSFER ENGINEERS
• Minimum 5 years experience to perform heat transfer analysis and thermal design of rotating and static gas turbine and laser components.
LASER TEST SPECIALISTS
• Diagnostics of laser optics
• Performance evaluation
• Laser physics
OPTICAL PHYSICISTS/ENGINEERS
• Analytical and experimental design/development of Aerospace optics
• Advanced unstable resonator
• Active-optical systems
• Auto-alignment, pointing and tracking
• Optical diagnostics and coherent processing

Attention

Florida is coming to see you June 21st
Phone: 765-9000

For a lot of advertisers, it may be the best single print buy you can make.

Technically, we're talking about TIME's Primary Spot Market Edition.

We call it TIME Big-time because that best describes where it goes: to thirty of the biggest markets in America. Places like Atlanta and Chicago. Dallas/Fort Worth and Detroit. Kansas City. Los Angeles. Miami and New York. Philadelphia and Phoenix. San Francisco and Seattle. And more.

Big-spending markets that account for the lion's share of liquor and cordial sales, foreign car registrations and airline passenger miles. TIME Big-time's circulation in these markets is 2.7 million, concentrated mainly in the top income quintiles.

There are a lot of different ways you can use TIME Big-time.

You can use it as an alternative to a national schedule in, say, Newsweek or Sports Illustrated. TIME's circulation in these markets is a million higher than Newsweek's, a million-and-a-half higher than SI's. And TIME Big-time's b&w page rate of $23,005 is right there with both of theirs.

Or you can use TIME Big-time as an alternative to local TV and newspapers. TIME Big-time is a better buy because it concentrates in the heaviest buying neighborhoods.

Or you can use TIME Big-time to supplement local TV and newspaper advertising, for maximum impact.

Or you can use TIME Big-time as a merchandising vehicle for dealers. Any markets that account for such a tremendous proportion of U.S. sales are bound to be the markets where most dealers do business.

TIME Big-time. It covers thirty major markets as no other medium does. For a lot of advertisers, it's probably the best single print buy you can make.

For more details, call your TIME representative. Tell him you're interested in the Big-time.

TIME. Where innovation is nothing new.

'Village' Residents, Police Differ on Gangs

in the Village tend to support the youths' contentions. There have been increases in petty crimes and vandalism, but no recent upsurge of violent crimes—despite reports to the contrary about attacks on women and children.

But the statistics have not served to allay the fears of many residents—primarily because most people don't know about the statistics and even when they do, they suspect the police are downplaying the incidence of crime.

Most important, the initial reports suggested erroneously that Thomas McCready of 268 West 12th Street, an actor who had earned a black belt in karate, had been the victim of a gang assault—and that is what is being fearfully repeated by many people in the community.

"We are in a state of siege," one woman declared at a hastily called meeting on "security problems" in Westbeth, the artists' housing development, across the intersection of Beethune and Washington Streets from where the stabbing took place.

During the meeting, the artists discussed forming a tenant patrol, circulated a petition demanding that a foot patrol be assigned in the area and said that they planned to march on the station house of the local police unit, the Sixth Precinct, on Thursday afternoon.

In a letter that is to be presented to the police and city officials with the petition, Mrs. Staack, the chairman of the Committee for Neighborhood Safety at Westbeth, wrote that Mr. McCready's "murder is the latest event in a series of robberies, beatings, muggings and vandalism."

Capt. William P. Fortune, the commander of the Sixth Precinct, said, however, that department statistics indicated there had actually been a slight decrease in robberies and assaults in the area in the last year.

He said that he did not see "a terribly bad gang situation" — a roving gang where you have children and adults being beaten up every day . . . we don't have that."

He said that the kind of well-disciplined, heavily armed gangs that roamed parts of Brooklyn and the Bronx had not operated in the Village for at least 20 years—if ever—and added that there had been nothing recently "to indicate a major change in our youth situation." Even so, he said, because of the current public concern he was having his men double-check.

Mrs. Staack, like other residents who were questioned, could recall the specifics of only two other recent assaults: one slightly north of the Village, in which several youths jumped on two men at Eighth Avenue and 17th Street for no apparent reason, and another in which a man, apparently complaining that youths in the Westbeth courtyard were making too much noise, shoved a small boy and, in return, was struck with skateboards by several other boys.

But Mrs. Staack said that she "heard of about two beatings a month," and added that "rumors spread like wildfire."

Several men and women maintained that some women and children were being terrorized by young teen-agers, but they said that they feared there would be reprisals if they were to make formal complaints to the police.

"There is a feeling of fear when you walk past a gang," Mrs. Staack said, referring to the youths in the parks. She added, "I don't know if it's because of the rumors that spread or this kind of macho, hostile attitude they have. On the other hand, I don't think we've been fair to the kids."

Peter Shalleck, the managing director of Westbeth, said that at a meeting with about 75 neighborhood youngsters earlier in the week, the youths seemed gripped about the McCready death and contended that they had had nothing to do with it.

He said the youngsters had formed a committee to repaint parts of Westbeth that had been "supergraffited" and that some indicated that they would like to help out on tenant patrols.

In the last six months, Mr. Shalleck said, there has been an increase in graffiti, general vandalism and "big kids ripping off little kids." But he added: "They're not killers. The killing was not typical or symptomatic of the real situation here. In my heart, I don't believe these kids are bad kids. There are a few, but they're certainly in the minority."

Blanche Schwartz, the principal of Intermediate School 70, at 333 West 17th Street, where many of the youngsters, including the one charged with the crime, attend classes, said: "Ninety percent of it is just kids hanging out for want of something better to do. I think the community has to provide places for the kids to hang out and enjoy themselves. I feel it's a community problem, definitely, and the community had better begin to cope with it constructively."

Early one afternoon, Andre Sanchez, 17, in T-shirt and short jeans, a little older than many of the youth, was sharing a bench in the courtyard at Westbeth with half a dozen friends whom Mrs. Staack pointed out as "members of the gang."

"You know what we are?"

Andre asked. "All we are is a group of kids who grew up in the neighborhood. We all hang out in the park, drink a few beers. We don't do nothing. We don't punch nobody. If somebody attacks me then I fight. And I don't use weapons, either."

"They're trying to blame us for that murder," he went on, "I had no idea about it until my mother told me."

In Minetta Park at Minetta Lane and Sixth Avenue, a 13-year-old girl said, "We hang out here and we get in trouble. People walk by and they hear us saying, 'Let's get that one, he's a fag.' But most kids do that and beat them up."

The 14-year-old boy who was arrested for the killing had been accepted into one of the best high schools in the city, and the principal and other teachers said that they found it hard to believe he had been involved in such a crime.

The night of the slaying, the boy had been in a school play and afterward had gone with a number of friends to the Feast of St. Anthony street fair in Little Italy, the neighborhood where he lives.

As the police now reconstruct the murder, the youths eventually walked to the Village and, outside a garage, began throwing old tires into the street and climbing around a truck owned by a friend of Mr. McCready.

As Mr. McCready happened upon the youths he yelled at them. Most of them ran away, but he caught the 14-year-old and apparently hit him. Then the boy stabbed Mr. McCready and tried to get away. Mr. McCready caught up with the boy again, however, and stabbed a second time and collapsed.

The police said that the boy had suffered a chipped tooth and a cut at the corner of his left eye that required three stitches. A young friend said that after being treated at St. Vincent's hospital, the boy went to Minetta Park at Minetta Lane and Sixth Avenue where he often spent time. "He had been drinking beer and was intoxicated," the friend said. "He had some blood on his neck. I cleaned it off so his mother wouldn't see it and told him to go straight home."

The boy was arrested shortly afterward. He spent six days at the Juvenile Center on Spott Ford Avenue in the Bronx. He was then released in the custody of his parents on Friday, after they assured a Family Court judge that he would be properly supervised and would not "endanger the safety of the community."

His trial is scheduled for August. If found guilty, the boy could be sent to a reform school for a maximum of 18 months.

In Greenwich Village, a youth waves what he calls a "J"—a marijuana cigarette—while talking to a policeman.

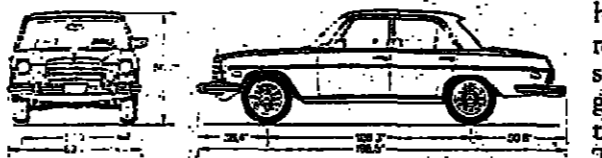

The control center of the Mercedes-Benz 280—the most copied sedan in the world.

What does it feel like to drive the most copied sedan in the world?

Eight of the world's major automakers have paid the Mercedes-Benz a high compliment. They've either compared their cars to the 280 Sedan—or have actually tried to copy it. Your first drive will show you that the others really haven't copied the 280 at all. And that the engineering of the 280 offers you rewards you may never have experienced in an automobile.

Turn the key. The unusual sound you hear is the voice of a most unusual engine. The 280's double overhead camshaft six. Its forged steel crankshaft has twelve counterweights for minimal vibrations at any engine speed. Its cylinder head is a light-alloy casting with two overhead camshafts.

Turn the key. The unusual sound you hear is the voice of a most unusual engine. The 280's double overhead camshaft six. Its forged steel crankshaft has twelve counterweights for minimal vibrations at any engine speed. Its cylinder head is a light-alloy casting with two overhead camshafts.

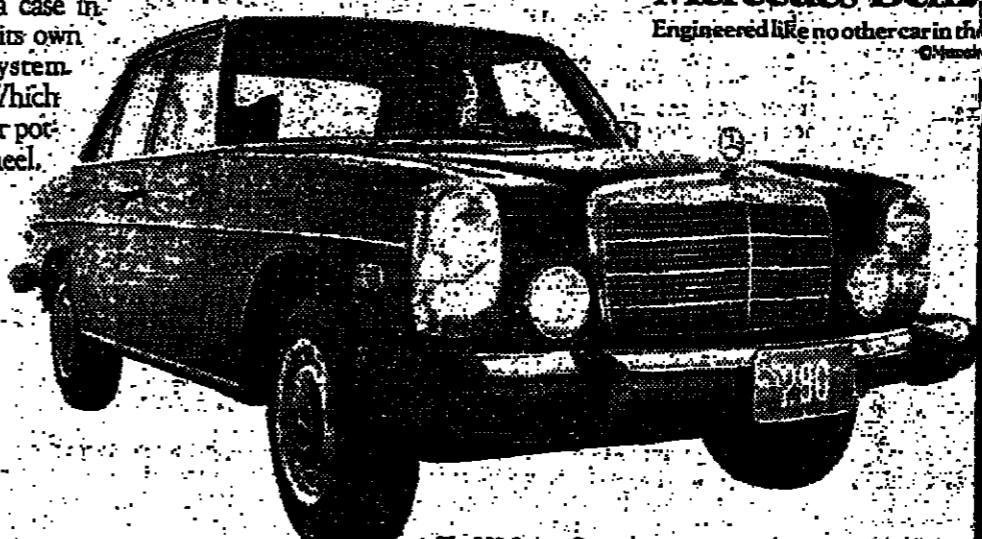

Sensory steel, precise in every dimension. The 280 Sedan is pure Mercedes-Benz. It defies imitation.

The beauty of the Mercedes-Benz engineering approach is something you can personally recognize. To do so, take the wheel of a 280 Sedan. The Mercedes-Benz 280 will make its own case. Clearly, quietly, brilliantly. Settle into the driver's seat. You can feel that it has been exactly designed to keep you in comfortable control even when the car is executing right, winding turns.

Throw it a curve. Now press the 280 into a turn. You'll feel the 280 Sedan's uncanny capacity for road-adhesion. Notice how the car holds its direction with impeccable straight-line stability and guides securely at even the maximum road speed. The reasons? The interaction of a broad spectrum of engineering accomplishments, thoughtfully balanced, constantly at your command.

The 280 Sedan's 4-wheel independent suspension is a case in point. Each wheel has its own separate suspension system. Even the rear wheels. Which means that any bump or pothole affects only one wheel. It's a different story with the imitators. In fact, the rear axles of practically all of them

The Federal Trade Commission (FTC) has announced that it will investigate the practices of several major retailers in Washington, D.C., regarding their handling of consumer complaints and their advertising practices.

The FTC's investigation is part of a broader effort to ensure that consumers are protected from deceptive practices and that businesses compete fairly.

The retailers under scrutiny include several large department stores and specialty shops. The FTC is particularly concerned about the way these retailers handle returns, exchanges, and repairs, as well as the clarity of their advertising.

Consumer advocates have welcomed the FTC's action, stating that it is a necessary step to protect the interests of shoppers. They hope that the investigation will lead to more uniform and fair practices across the industry.

The FTC is expected to release a report on its findings in the coming months. In the meantime, the retailers are working to address the concerns raised by the commission.

Long Uphill Road Forecast in Conrail Legal Tangle

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL
The biggest railroad merger in American history, which collapsed into the country's biggest bankruptcy, forcing the biggest reorganization, is fast developing into the biggest legal case ever.

outlining the issue and setting a long timetable for the litigation. The schedule calls for a presentation of briefs beginning Aug. 23 and running through next March 18.

River, Central New Jersey and Ann Arbor. With the railroads losing half a billion dollars a year, the Government providing massive cash transfusions to keep the important freight network alive, Congress last February approved a sweeping railroad reorganization act that regrouped six of the bankrupts into Conrail, a for-profit Government-supervised corporation financed by $2.1 billion in United States-backed securities.

the settlement be in the "public interest," "fair and equitable" and the "constitutional minimum." The first step—a big one—the court decided, was to agree on how the price should be agreed on. Then, once the ground rules were set, the special masters could apply these to each piece of property to determine its value.

Canadian Pilots Strike in Dispute Over

—MONTREAL, June 20 (UPI)—
Canadian airline pilots walked off their jobs early today to protest what they call degrading safety conditions because of a dispute over the use of French in Canadian air traffic control operations.

American and other foreign carriers are not involved in the dispute. The two major airlines involved, Air Canada and Canadian Pacific Air Lines, announced today that they were seeking an injunction to halt the walkout.

Weather Reports and Forecast

Summary

It will be warm and very humid today with showers and thunderstorms likely along the entire Eastern Seaboard and in the Appalachians. Scattered showers will occur from the northern Rockies through the Pacific Northwest, while the rest of the nation will have sunny skies.

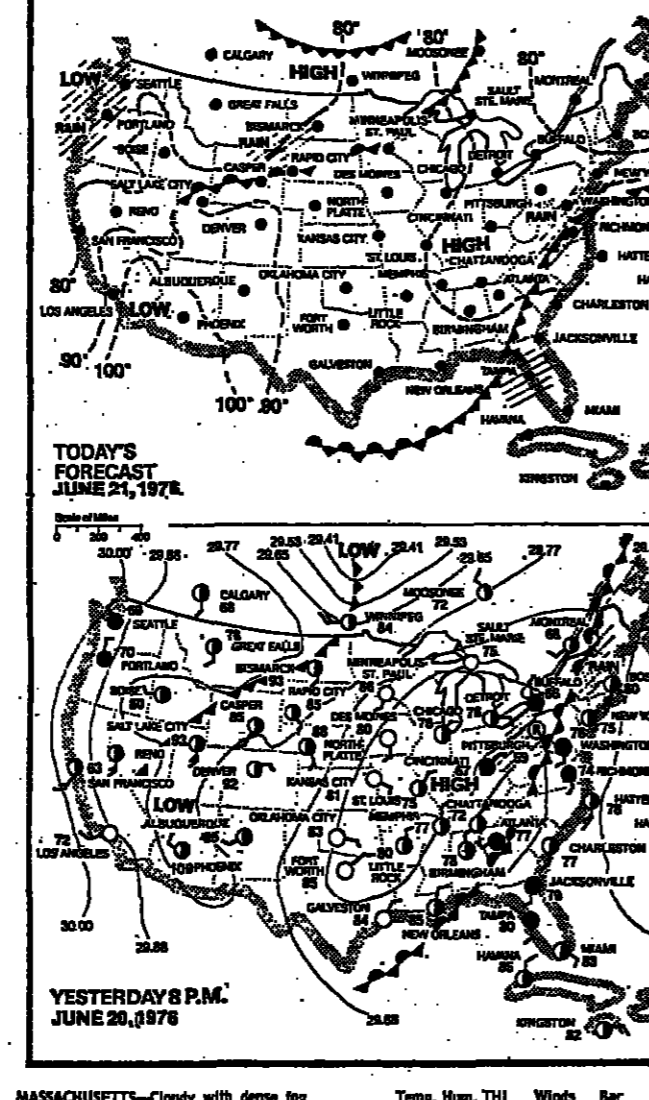

Figure beside Station Circle is temperature. Circle with boundary between cold air and warmer air, under which the colder air pushes the wedge, usually south and east. Warm front: a boundary between warm air and retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually westward.

NBC Marks Its Golden Anniversary

By LES BROWN
On Nov. 11, 1926, Dr. Walter Damrosch and the New York Symphony opened a four-hour, star-laden radio broadcast...

Sports Fantasy the name of the game.

Mr. Patrickelli had missed the first network broadcast by three years, he joined the station...

Coherent Structure

For years before the formation of NBC, there had been coast-to-coast hookups of stations for single events of national importance...

TWO FARM UNIONS AGREE ON MERGER

Chavez Joins With Puerto Rican Group in East

Special to The New York Times
SAN FRANCISCO, June 20—The United Farm Workers of America has announced that the union has merged with an independent Puerto Rican farm workers union based in Hartford.

The 20,000-member U.F.W. said that agreement last week on the merger with the 6,000-member Asociacion de Trabajadores Agricolas (Association of Agricultural Workers) was reached after one and one-half years of negotiations. Members of both unions must ratify the merger, which is expected within a month.

Dolores Huerta, Farm Workers vice president, said that the merger meant "quite a bit in terms of progress towards a national union" of agricultural workers.

Until now, the U.F.W. has been based primarily in California, with some organizing and legislative activity in Florida. The unions activities in other parts of the country have been largely focused on boycotts of table grapes, iceberg lettuce and Gallo wines.

Now "we have a firm organizing base on the United States East Coast," said Mark Grossman, administrative assistant to the union's president, Cesar Chavez.

The Hartford-based association has members in New York, Connecticut, New Jersey, Massachusetts, Delaware and Pennsylvania.

Organize One Movement

The merger is also considered significant ethnically. The bulk of the U.F.W.'s members are Mexican-Americans, with a number of Filipinos and the rest blacks and Caucasians. Ninety percent of the association's membership is Puerto Rican. Juan Irizarry, founder of the association, said, "Now we can organize one movement of every single farm worker, no matter what nationality."

Many of the migrant farm workers who work on the East Coast are recruited in Puerto Rico by United States contractors and come into this country under Public Law 87, which was passed in 1962. Under this statute, contracts are negotiated between growers and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. Irizarry said that the association was opposed to this setup because the workers had no say in the formulation of the contracts and "they lack good-fringe benefits."

Mr. Irizarry said that the association was founded in 1973 "on behalf of workers coming into this country under Public Law 87, with the goal of the union, not the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, negotiating contracts with growers."

No Contracts as Yet

Mr. Irizarry, 28 years old, said he first picked crops in the United States in 1971 in the Delaware asparagus fields. "I was fired for organizing activities," he added. At present the association has no contracts with any growers, although it has been organizing on the tobacco farms in Connecticut and Massachusetts, the mushroom fields of Pennsylvania, the potato growing region of upstate New York, and in blueberry and tomato growing areas in New Jersey, in addition to its Delaware asparagus activities.

There are no field workers on the East Coast working under union contracts. Farm workers were specifically excluded from the National Labor Relations Act when it was passed in 1935 and California is the only state that has a law giving farm workers the right to vote for a union and bargain collectively.

At present, however, the law is not in force because funds for the Agricultural Labor Relations Board, which administers the law, passed year, ran out in February. Since then, the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, which has been battling the U.F.W. to represent farm workers, and growers have joined forces to prevent any further appropriations from passing the State Legislature in Sacramento.

There is another money bill pending in the legislature as part of California's general budget for 1976-77 but the outcome of that appropriation is uncertain.

Mr. Irizarry said he felt there were "two important activities" that he would be engaged in now: attempting to get legislation passed that covers farm workers in Eastern states, and setting up service centers that would help farm workers with their problems.

This would parallel the organizing activities of the U.F.W., which has used service centers to help workers with problems such as health care, traffic tickets and other matters. The U.F.W. has even maintained service centers that are used by workers employed on ranches that are under contract to the teamsters.

Cocaine Found in Water

TAMPA, Fla., June 20 (AP)—Thirteen pounds of cocaine, believed to have been thrown overboard in a raid on a banana boat last week, was found bobbing yesterday in the water near a Tampa pier, United States Customs officers said. The cocaine is estimated to be worth $2.9 million in street sales.

The TV Squeeze. Why you're in it. How to beat it.

The "sold out" sign is up at the networks. On May 24th, Advertising Age reported that two of them had stopped accepting orders for prime time. The third was holding out for higher prices. Even fringe and daytime were tight.

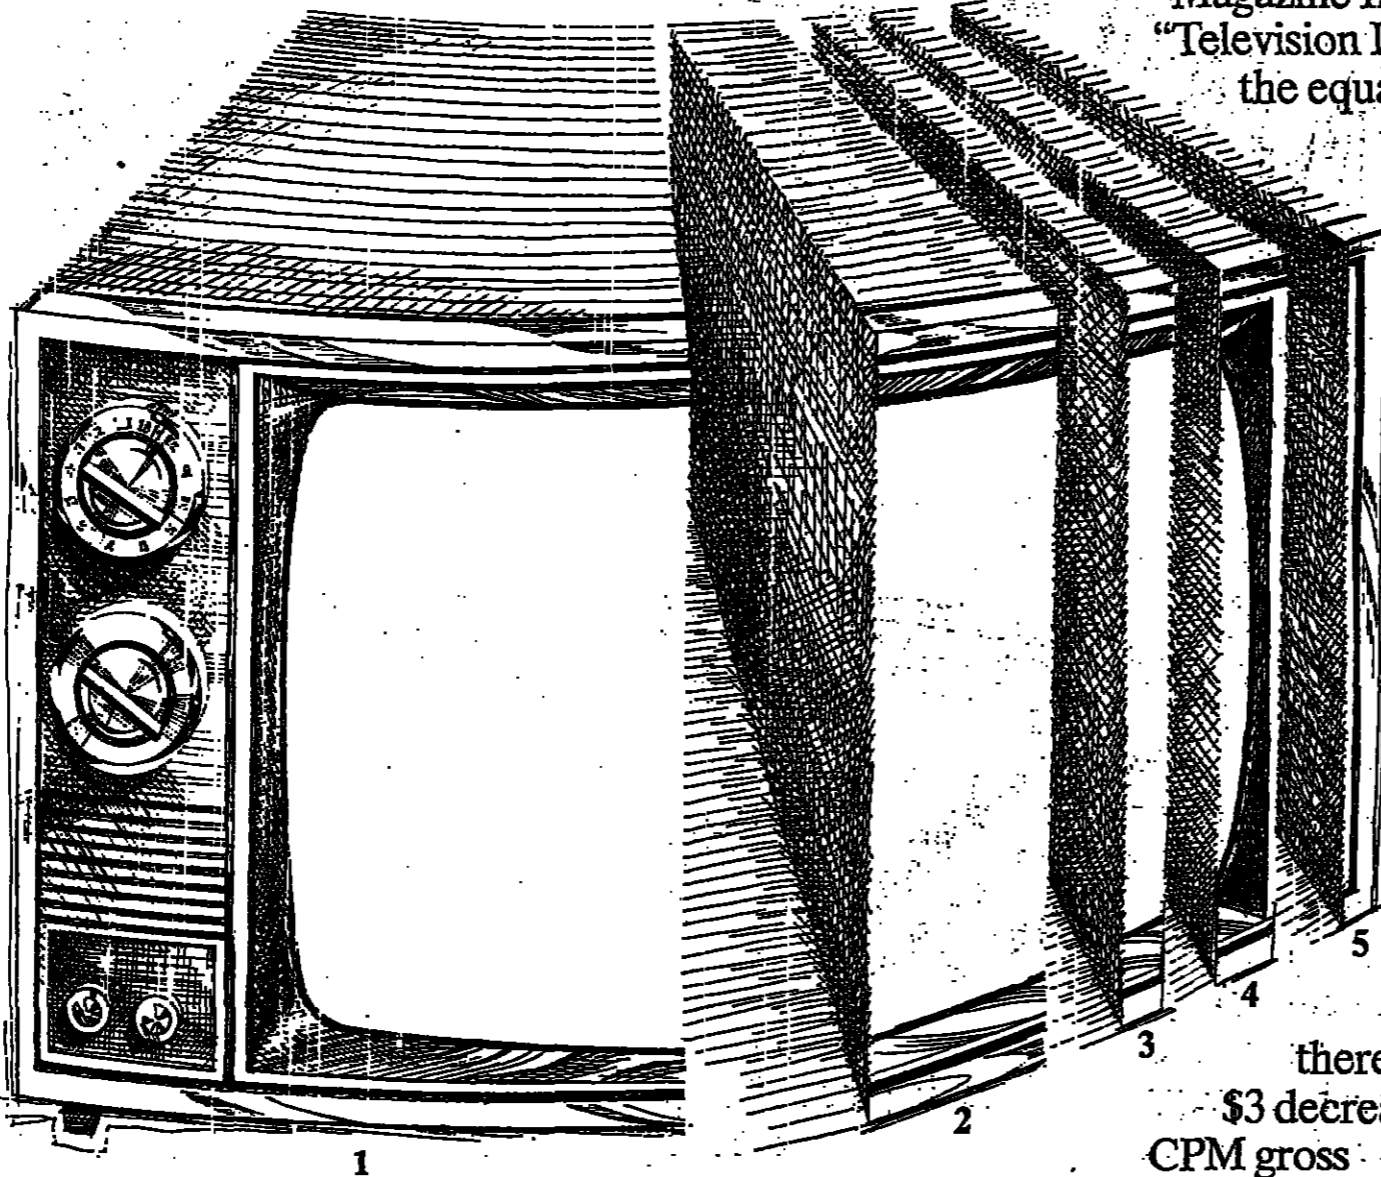

Advertisers and agencies alike are experiencing the TV Squeeze. Costs are up as much as 35%—as much as 50% for spot. And the big fear is, "Will I be locked out of the 4th quarter?"

How did it happen?

Network prime time is a limited commodity. It's 66 hours a week and no more. Apparently not enough to go around in an expanding economy.

Convention coverage, Olympics and Bicentennial specials further reduced the amount available in 1976, and helped set the stage for the Squeeze.

Come fall, still more time will be gobbled up by political announcements and the Elections.

WHERE HAS ALL THE PRIME TIME GONE? (1) Big advertisers moved early, bought up front. (2) Increased spending further reduced limited inventory. (3) More than 200 hours of prime time went to Convention coverage, Olympics and Bicentennial specials. (4) Still more will go to political announcements and Election coverage. (5) Dozens of new product introductions add to the Squeeze.

On top of this the networks have delayed the new season. Dollars budgeted for the usual 16-week 4th quarter must be compressed into 13 or 14 weeks.

Buying started in late April, versus mid-August last year, as major advertisers staked out claims, making large commitments up front.

Some advertisers found they couldn't spend all they wanted to, where they wanted to.

Those fortunate enough to have availabilities had to decide whether to settle for a big increase in budget or a big drop in GRP's.

Others had to look elsewhere.

Why shifting from an All-TV plan to a Magazine/TV plan makes sense.

Many advertisers with their eyes fixed on TV's boxcar numbers are surprised to discover that combinations of magazines—even single magazines like Newsweek—can deliver equally big ratings.

For example, Newsweek has a rating of 19.4 (men 18 to 49) which puts it ahead of such shows as All in the Family, Baretta and even Welcome Back, Kotter.

Unbelievable? Have your media people check it. And with Newsweek you not only get the kinds of ratings you expect from TV—you can get them at a lower cost per thousand. In other words, more GRP for your money.

Better still, you reach more of the people who are heavy magazine readers and relatively light TV viewers—the important group now known as "Magazine Imperatives."

How a tire advertiser can beat the Squeeze.

Let's assume you are marketing radial tires. Almost equal percentages of U.S. males are either "Magazine Imperatives" or "Television Imperatives." But the equality stops there.

49% of those men who bought radial tires are in the "Magazine Imperative" group—and it accounts for over half the volume.

Only 28% of such purchasers are "Television Imperative" group—account for only 26% of the volume.

Obviously magazines are important. But to what extent?

Newsweek recently made a study of a tire company that puts its entire $1.4 million budget into television.

A computer run was done analyzing the tire advertiser's actual TV buy.

A second run was done allocating of the same budget to the four newsweek.

Frequency was a standoff. But the Magazine/TV mix developed 82 more increased reach from 78.6% to 91.1%.

there was a $3 decrease in CPM gross impressions.

Even more striking is the comparative effect of the two schedules against each of the two major "Imperative" groups.

Against the "Magazine Imperatives" group (which accounts for 51% of sales) the Magazine/TV mix is highly superior to the All-TV plan.

It increases GRP's... maintains frequency... and is generally more efficient than television alone.

Your Newsweek representative can show you how shifting from an All-TV plan to a Magazine/TV mix can work for your product category as well.

Give him a call. It's a terrific way to beat the TV Squeeze.
